ANY playgoer who enjoys an engrossing human story artfully and dramatically unfolded is missing the time of his life if he does not go to see "John Ferguson." It is so packed with all the stuff that has ever thrilled an audience that the mild surprise its success has caused is a little puzzling. There is even an occasional disposition to congratulate the public on having enough intelligence to appreciate something of a sort which, as a matter of fact, the public has always enjoyed hugely. It is also a little puzzling to note that the Theatre Guild program proudly describes "John Ferguson" as "a realistic play."

One is moved thereby to wonder idly just what is meant in this year of grace by a realistic play. The Girl in the Next Flat is under some suspicion of using the words "realistic" and "disagreeable" interchangeably. When she describes a play as "realistic" it is safe to guess that she has found it frightfully interesting, but not quite nice. She probably thinks of "The Jest"—or "Othello," for that matter—as just too realistic for anything.

But the masters and journeymen of the Theatre Guild, doubtless more glib in the lingo of the Drama League, must mean something else. Of course, in one sense, all modern plays are realistic in manner if not in spirit. That has been the fashion ever since Mr. Ibsen. Therefore, when a contemporary play is regarded as so realistic that the fact must be proclaimed from the program, it is presumably realistic in a special sense. A chance visitor to the Fulton these days would, after inspecting the program, be perfectly entitled to expect "John Ferguson" to unfold as one of those plays which, discarding all the old instruments of theatrical effect, rely solely on the lesser poignancies of humdrum, every-day life—plays which, like "The Younger Generation," address themselves solely to the faculty of recognition. Now in "John Ferguson" St. John Ervine has written a smashing play, but he can scarcely claim to have dispensed proudly, not to say scornfully, with the handy aids to dramatic effect which, tried and true, have served the ends of a thousand and one successful plays. The mortgagor, the threatened foreclosure, and the evicted tenants, the letter arriving just too late, rape, murder, suspicion pointing to the innocent, confession, a boy torn from his wailing mother's arms—all these are in the quiet, humdrum, every-day life of old John Ferguson.

Of course Mr. Ervine's conscious rectitude in ending each act on a low note, his disdain of the resounding curtain speech, is as much of an affectation as any of the didoes of the old-time playwrights and does not at all conceal the fact that it is about the only old reliable he has not used. So the third act of "John Ferguson" is not overwhelmingly "realistic" merely because, after the girl has been despoiled, her assailant slain, and her innocent suitor dragged off to jail, the act continues to breathe long enough to allow the boy to say:

"It's colder the day nor it was yesterday."

To which the father makes answer:

"Ay, son."

And the curtain falls. This is a great change from the days when the curtain fell to tumultuous applause after some such finale as, "Rags are royal raiment when worn for virtue's sake." To be sure, even in the melodramas of social unrest with which the new season has broken out like a rash, the tag-speech is more apt to be: "The judiciary is the bulwark of our liberties," or "Evolution, not revolution, is the watchword for democracy." But the mere substitution to "Ain't the humidity something awful?" or "It isn't really so cold, but it's so penetrating," would not materially change the character even of these.

Few people seeing "John Ferguson" as now performed are likely to realize how good it really is, for its biggest scene is lightly thrown away. Whereas there can be little but praise for the performances of Henry Herbert as the idiot, Dudley Digges as the coward, Helen Freeman as the girl, and—in particular—Rollo Peters as the boy, the all-important rôle of the mother is sadly miscast. Thus is the great scene in "John Ferguson" forfeited. Thus is thrown away the opportunity for such a storm as swept the theatre when the smoldering Nance O'Neill blazed up in the never-to-be-forgotten third act of "The Lily." A chance like that does not come more than once or twice in a season. It comes in "John Ferguson." If the mother were played by Nance O'Neill, or by some actress with something of her occasional power to awaken old echoes in the human heart, the play now at the Fulton would be running to packed houses long after every other piece in town had been stored away and forgotten.

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

AUGUST, of recent years one of the most fecund months of the year, is contributing to the theatrical ensemble of the current season in lesser degree than has been its wont. Possibly it is the unsettled state of the relations of actor and manager; possibly it is merely a philanthropic determination to give the Summer shows their chance—but the fact remains that the eighteen or twenty attractions which August was expected to bring forth now promise to dwindle to half that number.

Consequently, those pressing weeks when six new plays are presented in the New York theatres—there were two of them last August, and a total of sixteen premières for the month—will be agreeably unknown for the present. Three new plays and one old one were revealed last week; during the week ahead, as will be found formally recorded in another column, there will be another trio. And even the week of the 18th promises to bring only two or three.

"Adam and Eva" and "The Bashful Hero," at the Longacre and the Bijou Theatres, respectively, are the announced attractions for that week, with "Too Many Husbands" and "Sunrise" looming up as possibilities. The former, which was to have had its première at the Hudson tomorrow night, was postponed because of "the illness of a prominent member of the company," an announcement which might properly lead to a statistical inquiry into the poor health of performers during rehearsals, and even to certain speculations as to the percentage of truth contained in managerial announcements.

The well-known truth that the theatre-going public will pay any price within reason, or even out of it, for entertainment which it desires with sufficient intensity is demonstrated anew by the fact that the entire lower floor of "The Follies" will bring $3.50 a seat from this time on. Hitherto, during the run of the 1919 edition, the first few rows have been scaled at $3.50, and the remainder of the floor at $3. Even these figures were an advance over those of last season, but there never was a minute when it was believed that they would be prohibitive. There never has been a time when the demand for "Follies" seats approximated that of today, and it is a foregone conclusion that the $3.50 will be paid just as readily as was the $2 of seasons agone. It must be remembered also that $3.50 is the box office price, and that it is a meagre assortment which is obtainable at the box office. The choice seats are at the agencies, and the premium and the war tax will thus bring the price of seeing "The Follies" from anything like an advantageous position to $4.40. Nor is the road likely to be treated any better this season; on tour as well as in New York "The Follies" has been steadily advancing its price in recent years, and the chances are that the $3.50 charge will be universal. But, then, the cost of silks and satins and scenery and comedians has been going up and up and up in recent years. Notwithstanding which "The Follies" in 1918 earned $100,000 for their producer, and it will be strange if they do not top this sum by $50,000 during the present season.

From the Hippodrome comes word that this year's entertainment at that institution will be called "Happy Days," but giving no details or hints as to personnel. However, Bert Levy, cartoonist, and Edwin Hanneford, clown, are known to have been re-engaged. Rehearsals are now keeping the soldiers out of several armories, and it is hoped to have things in shape for a late August opening.

The 1919 Hitchcock revue is about ready to be revealed to the populace, an event which will take place in Atlantic City in another week. Coupled with this announcement comes the news that "She's a Good Fellow" is in its final weeks at the Globe Theatre, so the destination of Mr. Hitchcock in New York is thus settled. Mindful of the claims of Mr. Ziegfeld that "The Follies" is "a national institution," Mr. Hitchcock stamps his own entertainment "a national necessity," and lets it go at that.

In a curtain speech on the opening night of "Lightnin" Frank Bacon announced that he had written another play, and that Winchell Smith and John L. Golden, even though they were as yet uninformed on the point, were going to produce it. Comes now, however, the news that Mr. Bacon has sold to Walter Wanger a play entitled "Five o'Clock," a work which may or may not be that to which the actor made reference on his opening night.

The newest Smith-Golden production, incidentally, is now being played in the suburbs as "Sunrise," although there seems to be every chance that it will be called "Thunder" when it is finally revealed hereabouts. That revelation, as already announced, will take place at the Criterion Theatre; the time, late in August.

Mr. Woods has mercifully reconsidered his intention to produce a play entitled "Naughty Love Birds," the name which has flared forth from the Eltinge Theatre billboards for the last few days. The farce which will occupy that playhouse will instead be known as "The Girl in the Limousine."

Cohan & Harris, ever mindful of the popular state of mind as regards plays, are disinclined to risk their murder mystery drama in New York at a time when the public is already being invited to bestow attention upon a trio of similar pieces. Thus "The Acquittal," instead of coming into the Cohan & Harris Theatre in September, will go to the Cohan Opera House in Chicago, a city which has not been having any murder plays of late, and is presumably ready for one. Later, when the market for this variety of play has eased somewhat in the metropolis, "The Acquittal" will be given its chance. In the meantime "The Royal Vagabond" is expected to run through September at the Cohan & Harris.

Sigmund Romberg, whose work for the theatre has hitherto been that of a maker of tunes, is about to enter the wider field of producing. His first offering, of course, will be a musical comedy, with a score, as might further be expected, by Sigmund Romberg. Frederick Arnold Kummer, who has dallied with the theatre on one or two previous occasions, but as a writer of melodrama, has written the book and lyrics.

"S. Morgan-Powell," thus runs the announcement, "Canada's best-known dramatic critic, is in town looking for the early crop of plays." To which the pessimistic playgoer, mindful of the Bolshevist nature of the recent entertainments, might reply that one intent on such a hunt should follow the red line.

It is a rare week which sees no olden comedy exhumed from its resting place for the edification and enriching of the librettists and composers. This time it is Mark Swan's seltzer-bottle farce, "The Third Party," which is to be made over into a musical comedy called, with or without apologies to O. Henry, "Strictly Business." Frank Fay will be the leading comedian, and a late Fall production is planned.

The news from Los Angeles is that "Civilian Clothes" is in its sixth or seventh week of stock prosperity. This is Thompson Buchanan's returned-soldier comedy, now in rehearsal here, and scheduled for production at the Morosco Theatre on or about the first of September. Mr. Morosco is also intent upon the production of "Seven Miles to Arden" at present, and in connection therewith announced during the week that he is seeking another Laurette Taylor. However, so are all the other managers.

"The Greenwich Village Follies," which has been finding the village theatre entirely too small for it, will take up its abode tomorrow night in the Nora Bayes Theatre, atop the Forty-fourth Street.

The union of Messrs. Erlanger, Dillingham, and Ziegfeld, announced during the last week, is not a new alliance in the theatre. Mr. Dillingham and Mr. Ziegfeld have a bond of sympathy in their adventures at the Century Theatre, and, together with Mr. Erlanger, they came to the rescue of Raymond Hitchcock a year ago when that comedian's revue threatened to crack under the strain. The new firm promises to embark upon the production of plays on a stupendous scale, and it appears that all that is required of the playgoer is patience.

The season has reached the second week in August, and as yet no player or producer has come forward with a plan for a permanent repertory company in New York. But the season, it must be remembered, has reached only the second week of August.

THE RECORD OF "CHU CHIN CHOW"

ALTHOUGH the American career of "Chu Chin Chow" probably will not equal the play's record in England from a money-making standpoint, the history of the production here during the past two years, to say nothing of its London run, indicates that the play is one of those bonanzas which occasionally come along to delight the managerial heart. The theatre has many hits, of course, but of the historic kind there come only two or three in a generation. And, while the evidence is not all in, there is every reason to believe that "Chu Chin Chow" will be one of them.

In London the record of "Chu" is nothing less than phenomenal. Oscar Asche, its author, produced it at His Majesty's Theatre on Aug. 31, 1916—a few weeks less than three years ago. Asche played Chu, and his wife, Lily Brayton, the slave girl. The piece proved to have that note of appeal which, when it intrigues the London public at all, intrigues it wholesale, and the result is that the end of the third year of the run—a run in which there has been no interruption—finds the weekly receipts constantly in the neighborhood of $25,000.

The owner of His Majesty's Theatre when "Chu" was produced was the late Sir Herbert Beerbohm-Tree. He read the manuscript before the production and pronounced it absurd. Asche, remembering the vogue of "Kismet," had faith in this oriental extravaganza and finally secured a contract from Tree which contained many clauses indicative of remarkable managerial foresight. Among other things, it specified that "Chu Chin Chow" could remain indefinitely at His Majesty's Theatre provided the receipts did not fall below $12,000 for two consecutive weeks. Another clause specified that any sale or lease of the property could not invalidate this contract. On the other hand, Tree insisted on the insertion of a clause that Asche must continue to act the leading rôle in order to get the booking.

The shrewdness of Asche as a manager was proven later when Tree died and His Majesty's Theatre was sold. The new owners, Grossmith & Laurillard, have been unable to get possession of their property for their own productions, although they bought the theatre a year ago last January. "Chu Chin Chow" has never fallen below the gross receipts of $12,000 per week in the past three years, in spite of air raids, Zeppelin bombings and the conditions caused by the war. When theatres were closed at night by the London authorities, because of the air raids, "Chu" was given at special matinées and at morning performances, and still it sold out. Asche has played the rôle continuously except for two weeks, when his physician compelled him to take a vacation, and when the rôle of Chu was played by E. Lyall Swete, who subsequently came to America to stage the piece.

The run of "Chu" in London alone has made Asche a millionaire. Not only does he draw the greatest share of the profits, but he pays himself a salary of $1,500 a week and gets, in addition, 10 per cent. of the gross in royalties, on the American performances, of course, as well as the London. In addition, he received from Comstock & Gest a bonus of $25,000 for the mere privilege of letting them do business with him.

Today he is reported to be more than tired of the play and the rôle, but unwilling to step out of the cast because such a step would mean the end of the run. Shrewd London producers estimate that the piece will finish a five years' run before it reaches the $12,000 minimum.

Morris Gest bought "Chu" for America without seeing it, having been swayed entirely by the report of Gene Buck, the lyric writer. The contract for the American production called for the scenery to be made in London, and, inasmuch as there is a duty of 60 per cent. on scenery brought into this country, the cost of producing "Chu Chin Chow" in America was approximately $175,000 on the night that the curtain went up at the Manhattan Opera House. In the beginning its operation costs were enormous; subsequently, of course, they were subjected to cuts, but are still tremendous.

The piece has now played two seasons in America, and began its third on Friday night at the Century Theatre. In the last two years it has broken records in nearly every city in which it has played, and, despite the cost of initial production here, has long since paid for it and has been earning for its American profiteers a profit of thousands of dollars a week. Its estimated profits in America to date are in the neighborhood of $200,000, and this figure probably will be multiplied several times before the piece reaches the end of its career.

SCHUYLER LADD RETURNS

SCHUYLER LADD, the young American actor who was last seen here in the revival of "The Yellow Jacket" and in several of the late Sir Herbert Tree's Shakespearean revivals, has returned from France two years after he sailed away. Ladd enlisted in May, 1917, with the unit that was organized by the Post-Graduate Hospital, and which established at Savenay the biggest of the A. E. F. hospital bases. He played many parts in the army, and soldiers familiar with recent theatrical history in America could not help smiling when at one time they found the creator of the Daffodil presiding as Mess Sergeant over the biggest and most successful mess in the A. E. F.—famous from the base ports to the front.

In the salad days of the A. E. F. there were occasional moments of leisure, and he played in several impromptu soldier shows, learning his lines on long ambulance rides and rehearsing them whenever chance offered. Later he directed for a time the Red Cross Theatre at Savenay, where so many of the soldier shows were given, and finally, when the job was done and the outfit sailed for home, Ladd stayed behind to be demobilized in France and take his own company on the grand hut-tour from St. Aignan to Coblenz, playing in "Silent Smith," "The Bishop's Candlesticks," a Hobart sketch, and other fragments which Oswald Yorke was able to dig up out of the manuscript stock of the Y. M. C. A.

The Drama Halts!

THE various prospective theatrical events referred to on this page are printed as per the announcements of the managers—in the blind hope that a settlement of the actors' strike will permit the theatre to carry on as usual.

At the time this section went to press the actors and the managers were still far from a settlement of their differences, and it was something of a question as to whether plays of any sort would continue to be produced. Everything here set down, accordingly, must be read in the light of events.

HAPPENINGS OF THE WEEK

WITH mid-August at hand the number of new attractions in the theatres this week will be somewhat fewer than might be expected. A melodrama and a couple of comedies, one of them bringing back a popular comedienne, will be the week's grist.

SHE WOULD AND SHE DID—Tuesday night at the Vanderbilt Theatre.

Grace George is beginning her metropolitan season somewhat earlier than usual this year. Her play is a comedy by Mark W. Reed, one of George Pierce Baker's Harvard playwrights, and deals with the humors of a country club and the woman who defied the lawmakers on the golf course. Miss George, of course, will be the woman who would and did.

John Cromwell will have the leading male rôle, and the cast will also include Cora Witherspoon, Edward Arnold, John Stokes, May Collins, Fletcher Harvey, Esther Howard, Isabel West, Ned Burton, William Bailey, and Maude Stover.

A REGULAR FELLER—Wednesday night at the Cort Theatre.

This is a comedy by Mark Swan, from whom it is customary to expect two or three plays annually. The announcement vouchsafes this much: "It is said to have a touch of novelty in that it utilizes, for the first time in an entire play, the universal automobile craze. The motor car has been introduced for special episodes and effects, but never before has it furnished the motif for an entire evening's entertainment." Which, of course, is something.

Ernest Glendinning will be the person of the title, and the cast will also include James H. Bradbury, Everett Butterfield, Edwin Holt, Roy Gordon, Charles Abbott, Dudley Clements, Albert Bushee, George Cukor, Miriam Sears, Margaret Greene, Charlotte Granville, and Kittie O'Connor.

THOSE WHO WALK IN DARKNESS—Thursday night at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre.

The presentation of this play at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre tomorrow will mark Owen Davis's second invasion of that avenue in as many months. "Those Who Walk in Darkness" has been fashioned by Mr. Davis from a novel by Perley Poore Sheehan, and is described in the advance matter as "a play surcharged with spirit and action." It is a love story which begins in an all-night lunch wagon, and ends amid more pleasant surroundings.

Laura Walker will be the heroine, and the cast will also number Amy Ricard, Donald Gallaher, Arthur Shaw, Consuelo Bailey, George W. Wilson, Helen Tracy, Katherine Sheldon, and Howard Kyle.

IN THE VARIETIES.

PALACE—James Hussey and Company, Ciccolini, Billy Montgomery and Minnie Allen, Nitta-Jo, Four Marx Brothers, Ernest Evans and Girls, Four Meyakos.

RIVERSIDE—Clifton Crawford, Craig Campbell, Pearl Regay and Lester Sheehan, Jack Kennedy and Company, Ames and Winthrop, Lillian Fitzgerald, Orville Stamm, and others.

ROYAL—Creole Fashion Plate, Arnaut Brothers, Venita Gould, Ryan and Healey, "The Man Hunt," Alfred Farrell and Company, McCormack and Millan, and others.

WHO'S WHO IN THE EARLY PLAYS

BY his performance in the rôle of the young Socialist in "The Challenge" last Tuesday night, Allan Dinehart served peremptory notice on the theatre that he is a player to be reckoned with. Previously, in bits on the vaudeville stage and for a few moments in "A Very Good Young Man," a season ago, he had given indications of abilities beyond the usual; his triumph in "The Challenge" is in no sense a sudden bursting forth, but the logical result of a long training in the theatre.

Dinehart is the namesake of his father, who was for many years manager of the old New York Casino, but, although he was reared in the midst of the theatre, he was destined by his parents for the priesthood. This, also, was the boy's earlier inclination and he studied for eight years in a Jesuit monastery before the longing for the stage overcame his desire for a religious life. Finally, his mind definitely made up, he left the monastery and entered the Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minn. His parents, in the interim, had moved from New York to St. Paul.

From St. Paul the family went to Butte, and here young Dinehart completed his academic education in Missoula University. It was during his college years that his first dramatic opportunity came to him. The once famous Daniel E. Bandman, who had retired from active stage work to a farm in the Middle West, organized a Shakespearean repertory company, composed largely of students, for a tour of that section of the country. Dinehart was one of the company and from this organization to the more professional stage was, of course, but a step.

In various Eastern stock companies during the next few seasons he got his real training for the stage. Then came a time when, despairing of recognition, he left the theatre for a time to be Secretary to a Catholic Father who was preparing a volume. But the old call presently reasserted itself, and the youth went back to the stage—this time in vaudeville instead of the stock companies.

Vaudeville, whatever else be said of it, gives the actor opportunity to assert himself more rapidly than does the regular stage. Both the choice of a play and the method of presenting it are left largely to the player. So in the varieties Dinehart began to find himself. He developed a real talent for finding and producing plays out of the beaten vaudeville path, and in them he began to develop an ease and economy of method as an actor. Today every vaudeville patron in the country knows Dinehart well by reason of his performance in a sketch entitled "The Meanest Man in the World," a fragile little piece which, in the naturalistic method of its presentation, was miles from the usual vaudeville sketch.

Arthur Hopkins, who was the first of the legitimate managers to discern the actor's possibilities, took Dinehart from vaudeville to play the rôle of the singing waiter in "A Very Good Young Man," produced at the beginning of last season. The play failed, but out of the débris Dinehart emerged with honor, and on the part of the public and producers alike there was immediate recognition of his talents.

His next rôle was in "The Gypsy Trail," in the Chicago company. He played the dreamy suitor, impersonated here by Roland Young, and, according to all accounts, with equal effectiveness. Then came the hero's rôle in "The Crowded Hour," also in Chicago, and now, apparently, the full measure of approval is his in a leading rôle in a metropolitan production.

THE work of William B. Mack as the blind newsdealer in "A Voice in the Dark" puts one more mark of distinction on the record of a player who has been well known on the New York stage for many years, and who has given several performances in that time which have caused his name to flash vividly across the theatrical sky.

The career of Mack goes back to the days of high-hatted tragedians and fly-by-night companies—when repertory troupes stalked the small towns and salary days generally passed unnoticed by the management. The lure of the stage, however, came to Mack from a loftier source than the cheap repertory company, for it was Julia Marlowe's performance in "Twelfth Night," seen in Bay City, Mich., which fired him with the desire to act.

Mack at the time was just out of college and was doing the usual post-graduate floundering in Bay City. A few weeks after the epochal appearance of Miss Marlowe Mack went to Detroit to see Robert B. Mantell in his Shakespearean répertoire, sought out the star, and demanded a job. Here, however, the story departs from the routine. He did not get it.

His first stage opportunity, if it may be so called, came with an organization called the Townsend Shakespearean Company, which chanced to stray into Detroit. Townsend was an Englishman and a typical tragedian of the genus now defunct. With him Mack got his first job—playing bits at a salary (promised) of $6 a week and board. He played the bits in many a small town in the Northern States and Canada, and got the board. But the $6 was rarely forthcoming.

Mack, after some months of this, left the troupe flat in a small Canadian town and cast in his lot with an organization headed by one Josephine Cameron, whose specialties were "East Lynne," "Camille," and other masterpieces of a bygone day. The company stranded somewhere in Eastern Canada, and Mack, with the aid of a few kindly freight trains, worked his way to Boston and thence back to Detroit.

His next engagement marked a distinct step up the ladder; he was engaged by Clay Clement for a piece called "New Dominion," and toured with that actor for two years at a salary (paid) of $20 a week. A year of stock in Oakland was followed by an engagement with Walker Whiteside, with whom he played in "Hamlet," "The Merchant of Venice," and a romantic play called "Heart and Sword."

There came, then, real opportunity in the form of an engagement with the Manhattan company of Mrs. Fiske—the beginning of an association which endured for four seasons, and in the course of which Mack brought himself strikingly to the attention of playgoers on several occasions.

After leaving Mrs. Fiske he appeared with Clara Bloodgood in "The Truth," then in Charles Klein's play "The Gamblers." He followed this with an impersonation of General Grant in "The Littlest Rebel," and then scored his greatest success in the rôle of Joe Garson, he of the silent revolver and dogged determination, in "Within the Law."

His next success of consequence was scored in "Polygamy," about five years ago. It was followed by appearances in a succession of plays of various merit and fortunes.

JOHN POWELL'S "JUDITH."

Speaking of an opera on the biblical subject of "Judith and Holophernes," for which John Powell is writing the music and George Harris the libretto, Mr. Powell confessed recently that the first need of American composers is the ability to write for the stage. The Metropolitan and Chicago companies have produced operas by Americans, but in every case, the pianist declared, though they may have had excellent musical material, they have fallen down in their lack of knowledge of stage technique.

"What is it that the Italians always seem to have, and that yet eludes the American composer?" Mr. Powell continued. "No matter how weak the average Italian opera may be as to musical content, at least it possesses certain theatrical qualities, a feeling for the building of climax, that makes it plausible and even gripping in stage representation. For this reason, indeed, many an Italian opera has won a measure of success its music never justified. And even in the greatest works—'Aida' for example—the purely theatrical has not been scorned. As for Wagner, his music dramas are filled with theatrical climax.

"Therefore, I have been haunting the Opera House and the theatre as often as my many engagements would allow. I have watched carefully what effects 'go' with the public. I have noted these, and when I set about the composition of the score for which Harris has furnished me with a really poetic libretto, my first effort will be to write music that will appeal because of its theatrical qualities. This does not mean that I shall cheapen or degrade the music. But I shall avoid such music as has only musical value, never forgetting that the real purpose of music in opera, after all, is to illuminate and heighten the action of the drama."

"NAIL" A MOORISH OPERA.

There was announced in London not long ago a new opera by Isidore de Lara, remembered at the Metropolitan for his "Messaline." Calve, Alvarez, Gilibert, and Journet sang that earlier work for Grau on Jan. 22, 1902. In the cast for the recent Covent Garden novelty were Rosina Buckman and Mr. Mullings as a pair of Moorish lovers, and Dinh Gilly, almost on his native heath, as a Moroccan Emir. Charles Ricketts designed "gorgeous" costumes, and Sir Thomas Beecham conducted.

De Lara is a Londoner, but despairing of home production he had set his work to a French text, for which an English translation had now to be prepared. The opera is named for its heroine, Nail. Its opening scene is described as a street frequented by the dancing girls in Morocco. The Emir tells a French officer of his love for the chief dancer, while it presently appears that Nail loves Hadyar, an Arab chief, condemned to death for his refusal to bow to the foreign yoke of France. At his peril he visits her and hears that which arouses his jealousy of the Emir.

A Moorish café is the scene of Act 2. Nail dances, her two suitors meet and quarrel, and the Emir lets Hadyar escape, preferring to fight him in the open, Arab to Arab, and steal his bride from his arms. Act 3 shows the lovers in the desert at night, closely pursued. Hadyar goes to fight. Nail drinks poison, which first renders her mad. The Emir, victorious, orders Hadyar's death, but Nail only sings her vision of reunion as she, too, dies. Stricken with remorse, the Emir is left to mourn the fate of the beautiful dancing girl.

Carl Rosa and "Antoine."

Alfred Van Noorden and the Royal Carl Rosa Company gave in June at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, a new opera by a British composer, Reginald Somerville's "Antoine." It is a young fisherman who gives his name to the opera, and who, before the curtain rises, has lost his sight. In the Breton village is a fountain whose waters are credited with miraculous healing powers, but Antoine scoffs at the test. When, at length, he bathes his eyes in the holy waters his sight is restored, but he is fated to behold his wife, Thérèse, in the arms of a would-be lover who has been attempting to lure her from home. In the end husband and wife are reconciled, the curtain thus falling on a "happy ending."

What Do You Like in Pictures?
"Choosing a Wife" is a production that is noteworthy. It solves man's greatest problem. Its trenchant story won fame in book form as "The Elder Miss Blossom"; and the printed word has found added strength in visualization. The film has an all-star cast and was artistically produced in beautiful rural England.

HOTELS AND RESTAURANTS

SPEAKING of MEALS

Don't you sometimes wish that you could drop all the cares of housekeeping, the everlasting routine of meals, and simply have what you like, served as you like it, and cooked the way you like it cooked? That would be having all the joy of a home without any of its cares. Well, there is a place, the Hotel Hamilton—really the homiest place—where you can have just this. You take an apartment all furnished, with the care and cleaning thrown in free, and you simply go down to the cool, pleasant dining room for meals.

There's a very good cook, who has always cooked in homes, and likes to use plenty of fresh butter and fresh eggs. The food bought in the open market is indeed very fresh. It is kept in the frost-covered refrigerators, just enough for one day's supply, even to fresh fish, prepared in the kitchen that is spotless and clean, and daintily served while it is very hot or very cold, just as it should be. When friends visit you there are additional little attentions that make it a pleasure to entertain. Doesn't it sound delightful? So it is in reality.

Do step down there to find out about living there yourself. But hurry, for others are planning to live there too.

ON SCENARIOS

SCENARIO writers who have more of aspiration than accomplishment to their credit may be discouraged by what E. M. Robbins has to say under the caption "Why Is a Scenario Writer?" in the 1919 Year Book issued by Camera, a Pacific Coast publication. But Mr. Robbins does not intend to be discouraging. He tells the scenario writers to go ahead with their work and gives them some valuable information as to what they should and should not do.

The article begins with reports from various studios as to their purchases of scenarios, as follows:

"In a questionnaire submitted to the various studios in Hollywood and vicinity, three questions were asked. First: How many scenarios were purchased during the year 1918? Second: How many were rejected? Third: What was the chief reason for rejection? To give a fair idea of the results obtained from the questionnaire, the following answers are enumerated:

"The American Film Company, at Santa Barbara, Cal., purchased 15 scenarios and rejected 3,072. The Brentwood Film Corporation purchased one and rejected 50. The Brunton Studio, which during the forepart of the year 1918 were purchasing stories for Bessie Barriscale and Louise Glaum, rejected 2,450 scenarios and arranged for the purchase of 100.

"The Chaplin Studio rejected 3,500 and purchased one. The Christie Studio read 5,000 stories, bought 110 and produced 104. The Fairbanks Studio purchased six stories out of 1,171 submitted.

"M. M. Stearns of the Dorothy Gish Company states that 99 per cent. of the scenarios submitted were rejected and that of the remaining 1 per cent. four were purchased, and several are now being held on option, awaiting the star's decision, whether or not to purchase. D. W. Griffith bought fifteen stories during the year. He rejected in the neighborhood of 9,000.

"William S. Hart reports the purchase of eight stories out of a submitted 3,000. The Metro Pictures Corporation, in answering the questionnaire, stated that sixty stories were purchased, and that they presumed somewhere in the neighborhood of a million had been turned down.

"The National Studios purchased twelve stories out of 1,872. Mary Pickford bought one submitted scenario and has been rejecting an average of five a day."

The studios reported further, Mr. Robbins says, that most of the scenarios submitted were not suitable screen material.

"It is quite probable," he adds, "that 20 per cent. of the scenarios depend on dialogue to tell the story, and at least 40 per cent. leave characterization entirely out of the synopsis."

Mr. Robbins questioned producers as to what they desired and learned that "the two things most wanted are characterization and situation."

The scenario writer is warned against attempting to put his story in technical form. The conditions in each studio vary, and each employs its own experts to prepare the continuities from which the directors work. All they want from outsiders are synopses.

Urging those with ideas suitable for the screen to get to work on them, Mr. Robbins continues:

"If you have a story, by all means submit it. Don't tell the producer how to produce it. Don't tell him that it is a good story. Don't tell him how long it took you to write it, nor how many of your immediate friends have told you that it would be a howling financial success, if his star appeared in it.

"But just sit down quietly, using a good black record ribbon on almost any kind of a typewriter, and in just as few words as possible, tell the real meat of the story, giving the principal characterizations in full, and not overlooking any situations that might add to the suspense or general interest."

Writing under the caption "Hints for Scenario Writers" in the September Picture-Play Magazine, William Lord Wright says:

"One producing company is said to inform writers of original screen plots that they will consider only stories that have appeared in print in magazines or as novels. 'Go and get your plot published as a magazine story and we will buy it,' they are reported as telling writers of good originals. 'We want the prestige of the magazine to support our screen play,' is the alleged assertion. If this is true, and it appears to be, it is dense ignorance from where I sit. A good plot is a good plot whether it has been published in a magazine or not. Personally, I am inclined to think that this adapting magazine-stories custom has almost led to believe that if certain publications print a story that is sufficient reason for filming it, no matter whether the story is fit for the screen or not. In my opinion a good original plot is worth more to any audience than a doubtful magazine story. After all, the play's the thing!"

One of the blindest acts of producers, it seems to the writer, is to insist upon making photoplays out of printed stories. The fact that a story has been printed in a magazine or book is absolutely no reason for believing that it will make a good photoplay. But, of course, if the producers are thinking only of profiting by the popularity of an author or a story—why, then, do they so frequently change the name of a story when it reaches the screen and all but conceal the name of its author?

PICTURE PLAYS AND PEOPLE.

John William Kellette, director of the Paramount-Briggs comedies, has engaged Gene Warren as his assistant. According to report, he found that he needed the services of a woman in working with the children who appear in the comedies.

"The Night of the Dub," the first Ernest Truex two-reel comedy, directed by John Joseph Harvey for Amedee J. Van Beuren, will be released soon. Mrs. Sidney Drew made the scenario from a story by Albert Payson Terhune.

Sam Hardy has been engaged by World Pictures to support June Elvidge in "His Father's Wife."

Gerald C. Duffy, former editor of Picture Play Magazine, has joined the Goldwyn scenario staff, and Lynde Denning has resigned as editor of Wid's Daily to become assistant to Ralph Block in Goldwyn's publicity department.

R. A. Walsh will direct Fox's production of "From Now On," in which his brother, George Walsh, will be the star, supported by Regina Quinn.

John W. Noble has been engaged by Vitagraph as a director, his first work being "Fate in the Balance," with Gladys Leslie, and Arthur Edwin Krows has been added to the same company's scenario staff.

THE PICTURE'S THE THING.

TALKY scenes, in which the actors make silent conversational motions, are senseless in photoplays. Subtitles used to tell the story of a photoplay are either superfluous or ought to be. The essence and substance of a dramatic motion picture should be pantomime and meaningful settings. The screen is essentially different from the stage. These things have been and are being reiterated by critics of the screen—and some say that the critics are academic, unpractical, ignorant of studio conditions and of what the public wants. But now practical men of the studios are beginning to express their opinions—and here's what Cecil B. De Mille has to say:

"I wish there were a law making it a criminal offense for a screen actor to speak before the camera. Obviously, words do not register on the screen; but all too often an actor or actress loses sight of this fact. Instead of 'putting over' the idea in pantomime they rely upon the spoken word, and the result is very satisfactory to the handful of spectators who witness the scene in the making, but the same scene on the screen resembles two ducks quacking at one another.

"Hearing is one of the most acute of the senses, and, in spite of the director's best efforts, the spoken words will beat through the wall of protection which every good director rears against the effect of the voice. This tends to lower the critical value of the director, and the picture suffers accordingly.

"What is true of the voice is equally true of music as an aid to emotional screen work. What assists the actors hinders the director.

"By long practice and training I have learned to ignore the music. But the power of the voice continues to bother me and detract from the screen performances of many actors.

"Of course there is an exception to this general rule. Spoken screen titles obviously must be spoken in the scene, but these are infrequent enough to have little or no effect on the people involved.

"In so far as it is possible, I insist on my company working in vocal silence. Pantomime is entirely capable of conveying every idea if only the actors are equal to the situation.

"Stage and screen technique differ so widely that they are almost separate arts. Actors from the stage entering the screen field for the first time are inclined to doubt this. The results are often disappointing. The actor relies on his voice, perhaps his greatest aid on the stage, to convey his emotions on the screen.

"The day is coming—and it is not far distant—when the voice will be completely barred from the studio stage, excepting always in the case of spoken titles. I hope we shall see a day when to all intents and purposes my wish regarding a law on the subject will have been granted.

"With the coming of that day we will have better pictures. One has only to consider the great actors and actresses of the screen to be convinced of this. Consider any really great film actor, and you will see that he seldom relies upon his vocal powers to project his idea.

"Fortunate is the actor who has learned this lesson. And fortunate is the director who works with such an actor, for one of his greatest handicaps is removed by the elimination of voice."

Mr. De Mille, in the writer's opinion, is too lenient with the spoken subtitle. Almost any scene in which the actors are represented as talking is weak, even if their words are thrown on the screen subsequently. If a photoplay needs such scenes to be intelligible it is inadequate pictorially.

Oscar Apfel, World director, also has something to say about subtitles, as follows:

"We have a tendency to put too much stress on sub-titles. We do not give the public credit for enough intelligence and consequently load a picture with hundreds of feet of titles that could better be devoted to action. The day is coming when pictures will be made without a foot of titles, except those necessary to introduce characters."

In an effort to cope with subtitles, the Goldwyn Company has formed a "title jury," representative of different points of view, which is to give a verdict on each bit of text in a photoplay with power of revision or elision.

It is to be hoped that the jury will reverse the supposed rule of court procedure and judge each subtitle guilty until proved innocent, the penalty in each case of guilt being death, with never a stay of execution. A subtitle is usually guilty of insulting human intelligence, violating good form, or encroaching on pictorial domain, or encouraging mental laziness, each of which is an artistic crime.

SCREEN NOTES.

People are always remarking upon the speed with which photoplays are conceived, produced and exhibited, but Conway Tearle says that there are exceptions to the rule. He has acted for seven productions in the last year and only one of them has been released. Those completed, but still in their tight tin cans, are "Human Desire" and "Mind-the-Paint Girl," with Anita Stewart; two photoplays, with Grace Davidson: one with Florence Reed, and "April Folly," with Marion Davies. He is now at work in Constance Talmadge's forthcoming picture, and wonders whether it, too, will be held back for one or another reason.

Arthur F. Beck has purchased the interests of the Artco Productions, Inc., which is producing the Augustus Thomas-Leah Baird pictures, and has engaged George Irving as director for the productions.

World Pictures will distribute the photoplays to be made by the Lawrence Weber Picture Production Company.

The second motion picture fashion show of the Universal's educational department entitled, "That Well-Dressed Look," is to be issued soon.

Stuart Holmes has been signed by Arthur F. Beck to appear for two years in pictures to be distributed by Pathé.

R. Cecil Smith, recently of the Thomas H. Ince forces, has been signed by Myron Selznick to write scenarios.

John Bowers, who was Madge Kennedy's leading man in "Through the Wrong Door," has been signed by Goldwyn on a contract that does not expire until Nov. 20, 1920.

J. Robert Pauline, who has appeared in vaudeville as a hypnotist, will be featured in a fifteen-episode serial by Supreme Pictures, Inc.

Maxwell Karger has taken over complete control of the productions of Screen Classics, Inc., it is reported, and June Mathis is preparing to write most of the company's scenarios.

Scotti Sings the Year Round.

Following the success of the Scotti Grand Opera Company in its travels in the South last Spring this organization will tour again in the Fall, opening in Montreal, Oct. 6, and visiting some twenty-five of the more important cities east of Chicago during that month. Mr. Scotti himself recently opened a record season of the Summer opera "pops" at Ravinia Park, near Chicago. He appeared there in his role of Chim Fen in "L'Oracolo," preceded by "Pagliacci" with Morgan Kingston, Florence Easton, and Milo Picco.

Beecham at Old Drury.

Sir Thomas Beecham, partner now in the Royal Opera at Covent Garden, is just announced as inaugurating a new venture, light opera at Drury Lane. In so doing, it appears, Sir Thomas was carrying out a long-cherished plan which dates from his earliest operatic seasons. He has always had a penchant for light opera, particularly of the French school, and it was recalled that in 1910, during his season at His Majesty's Theatre, several works of this character were produced, such as "Muguette" and "Shamus O'Brien."

ROSSINI'S "DOLL SHOP."

Something "altogether new" was what all polite London exclaimed at the production by the Russian Ballet at the Alhambra in June of "La Boutique Fantastique," the work of Rossini in his old age. After composing "William Tell" he amused himself in his forty years of leisure by writing a quantity of comic music that has never before been given to the world. It had been happily chosen and put into orchestral dress by Ottorino Respighi. The London first-night earned recalls for Massine, the chief doll and dancer with Lopokova in the can-can; also for Derain, who designed the entire production, including a "comic curtain," and for Henry Defosse, who conducted. The costumes in the doll shop were those of the mid-Victorian sixties.

"Into this wonderful shop," wrote one reviewer, "come various folk in most picturesque version of the garb of our forefathers and mothers, and possibly of ourselves. Faithful to period the costumes of Papa, Mamma, the English Old Maid, the Little American Boy and Little Girl come out as refreshingly new, and one can see the institution of several new fashions tomorrow as the result. Two of the dolls are purchased by separate parties. The dolls are lovers and decline to be parted, and at the suggestion of their variegated companions they run away—it may be on board the fearful and wonderful paddle steamer, it may be over the Titanic cliffs—but the purchasers returning for their parcels next morning find the dolls gone. The protests are resisted by everyone including the two poodles, who worry the Mamma's skirts in the true poodle manner.

"But before the dolls are bought there is a dazzling parade of stock. It includes the Venetian Dolls with land gondola complete; the members of the Royal suite in a pack of cards one would very much like to possess; some delicious fairies with dresses draped with red flowers—some of the most refreshing costumes one has ever seen on the stage, and others all in accord with the endless requirements of the doll buyer. The evolutions of the different characters are marvelous. There are the tarantella and gay vieille, the quaintest of duets by the poodles, can-can—an extraordinary piece of work which was cheered to the echo last night—a charming pizzicato number by the fairies, the whole concluding with a grand finale, a mock fugue that embodies the true spirit of burlesque."

Dirk Foch on His Travels.

Dirk Foch, who made his first New York appearance recently as guest conductor with the Stadium Orchestra, is a far-traveled musician. He was born in Batavia, Java, and brought up in India until his father came as a Government official to Dutch Guiana, South America. The son speaks English as well as other European languages. He began violin study in India, while among his later masters was Joseph Joachim.

London Hears Operas in July.

London's concert season was already waning late in June, but grand opera was to run on through July. "Although for the next few days there is nothing very eventful at Covent Garden," said The Chronicle, "we shall have a crop of novelties beginning in about a week's time." Among the works promised were Ravel's one-act opera, "L'Heure Espagnole"; Mascagni's "Iris," de Lara's "Naïl," Zandonai's "Francesca da Rimini," Puccini's three little operas, and Wolf-Ferrari's "Jewels of the Madonna."

Ithaca's 101 Free Scholarships.

One New Yorker was among the 101 free scholarships reported at the Ithaca, N. Y., Conservatory of Music for the last year. Ithaca itself had twenty-eight in the list, with forty-one from the rest of the State, seventeen from Pennsylvania, and fourteen from ten other States.

MUSICIANS OVERSEA.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Society, writing from Europe as to the proposed tour of his orchestra there next Spring and Summer, is enthusiastic over the prospect of leading the first American concert in Brussels. "My old friend and colleague, Ernest Van Dyke," he says, "agreed to handle all our Belgian concerts, and introduced me to M. Lambotte, a high official in the Beaux Arts. On the same afternoon M. Lambotte introduced me to King Albert and Burgomaster Max, who were both exceedingly kind and promised us a warm welcome."

Johnson Declines "Parsifal."

Edward Johnson, the American tenor, recently sang in a series of concerts at Turin and Milan, devoted to Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and two numbers from "Parsifal." "I have been offered 'Parsifal' at La Scala," he wrote his old managers here, "while proposals come from Rome, Turin, Madrid, Barcelona, and Trieste. However, I'm off for America to try my luck." Johnson has been a reigning success in Italy for ten years, but is returning to America next Fall to sing with the Chicago Opera Company.

Puccini Seeks Another "Butterfly."

Signor Puccini lately arrived in London to direct at Covent Garden the rehearsals of his one-act operas first produced last season in New York. The Italian composer is looking about for a subject for a new opera, and hopes he may get an idea while in England. Ever since he got the inspiration for "Butterfly" during a London trip, he has hoped for a similar piece of luck. He told interviewers that he found London greatly changed since he was last there in 1913, before the war.

MUSIC IN FICTION

By JAMES GIBBONS HUNEKER

When I read Carl Van Vechten's "The Music of Spain" I thought that little could be added to its comprehensive sweep of the situation. Studied in company with Havelock Ellis, his "Soul of Spain," or R. A. M. Stevenson's "Velasquez," a pretty good notion of the arts of that fascinating country may be obtained. But when I read the same writer's "Modern Musical Fiction"—in "Interpreters and Interpretations"—I knew that he had said all that could be said on the subject up to the year 1917. I envy Mr. Van Vechten's power of mental digestion. Not that his list of musical fiction is long, but it contains little that is attractive, either to the musical person or to the confirmed novel reader. I carry libraries in my own skull, yet I balk at the task which he set himself in reading the sentimental balderdash called a "musical novel"—balderdash with a few striking exceptions.

For years I browsed amid the herbage in this field of fiction—the backwaters of fiction might be a more precise ascription—and usually found it bitter and unwholesome. We smile now over the inflated sentimentality and Mendelssohn worship of "Charles Auchester," and the professional music critic shudders at the mistakes of literary men and women dealing with musical themes. "The First Violin," by Fothergill, once had a certain vogue. It is pretty indifferently written, and reeks with Teutonic "schwarmerei." The characters are the conventional puppets of fiction armed with baton or violin bow instead of sword or dagger. This story, which has no interest now, nevertheless had for its hero a well-known violinist and preceptor, the late Henry Schradieck. When young he was a picturesque-looking man; as old, imposing. At the time the novel appeared it was an open secret in musical circles that Schradieck was the first violin. He lived many years in New York, Cincinnati, and Philadelphia.

"Evelyn Innes," by George Moore, is a book of another color. It is written by a master of his art, and if it had not been rewritten so often it would have retained a longer hold on public affection; but two or three Evelyns confuse readers. I have read them all and best like the original. Mr. Moore's religion has always been a matter of mystery. Born a Roman Catholic with Protestant ancestors, he has been a member of both faiths—alternately. When I reviewed his "The Brook Kerith" the Irish Flaubert (or should I say the Celtic Casanova?) corrected me in a letter to The Sun newspaper, (October, 1916.) He declared that he had never been a Roman Catholic; Catholicism came into the family when his great-grandfather, a Protestant, went to Spain, where he married a Roman Catholic lady. At first blush we should say that Mr. Moore is an agnostic, but, Roman Catholic or Protestant or agnostic, his interest in the Church has always been marked; in several of his novels religion fairly obsesses him. Her ritual dominates his vision and he loves to finger the livery of the Lord. He is exercised, almost haunted, by the idea that outside of her pale salvation is impossible. "What if this be true?" asks George Moore as he arises from his midnight couch, (he goes early to bed now,) fearing the dark and looking for some sign of dawn. A product of our time, he enjoys this acrobatic flirting and balancing on the rope of faith swung across the chasm of doubt and despair. Religion is one of his leading motives, art another; especially the art of music. In "Evelyn Innes" the two themes are cunningly intermingled. In the sequel, "Sister Teresa," music is not the conqueror, religion is.

Evelyn is the daughter of a devotee to archaic music and instruments. She has a promising voice, but her father is so absorbed in the revival of Palestrina, Vittoria, and plain chant and old English composers that he neglects the girl's vocal future. She plays on the viola de gamba and sings at sight. Her mother had been a celebrated opera singer of chaste life and with bravura tastes. Before her daughter had developed the mother died. The dreamy father, the high-strung, ambitious girl, a dreary home in Dulwich, near London, and a rich Baronet, a music lover and not averse from notoriety—you may imagine what follows. Evelyn goes to Paris with him—and with a certain Lady Duckle as chaperone. The scene at Madame Savelli's when Evelyn's voice is discovered is excellent. Of course, any one will recognize in this Paris singing teacher the famous Madame Marchesi, mother of Blanche Marchesi, now in London, and a singer who should have startled the world, for she sang better and knew more, musically speaking, than a dozen of her mother's celebrated pupils. Lady Duckle disliked Wagner. She said so to Sir Owen Asher, the protector of Evelyn. "No, my dear Owen," she cries, "I am not a heretic, for I recognize the greatness of this music, and I could hear it with pleasure if it were confined to the orchestra; but I can find no pleasure in listening to a voice trying to accompany a hundred instruments. I heard 'Lohengrin' last season. I was in Mrs. Ayre's box—a charming woman—her husband is an American, but he never comes to London. I presented her at the last Drawing Room. She had a supper party afterward, and when she asked me what I'd have to eat, I said, 'Nothing with wings! * * * Oh, that Swan!'"

Now, this is distinctly witty—particularly that absentee American husband—because it is the sort of criticism that a woman like Lady Duckle would make. And there are many of her intellectual calibre on both sides of the big aviation pond.

Without explaining the intermediate processes, Evelyn becomes a great singer, a great interpreter of Wagner; and it is precisely this hiatus in the recital of her artistic development that deprives the story of some vraisemblance. I dislike those people in fiction who become full-fledged artists on the turning of a page. However, Mr. Moore was treading on dangerous territory, and knowing this he wisely omitted the study-years. Evelyn, whose character reveals little growth—I find her rather dull and opinionated, not to say pedantic, throughout—returns to London to Covent Garden, where, to the odors of gas, stale vegetables, and modish perfumes, she sings celestially, (this was before Oscar Hammerstein built the Kingsway Opera.) The strongest episode is when she goes to her poor, old, impracticable father to beg his pardon for her elopement with Sir Owen. She falls at his feet and mentally pictures herself as Brünnhilda kneeling to Wotan in the last act of "The Valkyre." She mentally repeats the imploring phrase of the goddess made woman, and as might have been expected, her father is vanquished. It is a transposition of art to life, and the dual nature of the lyric artist is subtly shown.

But what a daughter, what a father! If you were frankly to ask me whether a girl would thus sacrifice everything she had been taught to consider sacred for art's sake I would as frankly reply: Yes, lots of them have done so, and externally were no worse for the experience. All the rest is a matter of personal conscience, and with that side the author deals in an unexpectedly conventional manner; I mean conventional in the religious sense. After all, a man or woman cannot shake off so easily the traditions of race and religion. They are in the blood. Mr. Moore does not believe that the moral sense can flourish in an artistic atmosphere. This, I submit, is not even a half truth. Why should it? has asked George Bernard Shaw. After two lovers, then twenty—the deluge, proclaims Mr. Moore. There he is right; but there are decent women—men somehow or other don't count—a chaste tenor would be a "chaser" to his audience, chiefly composed of women—singing in public in grand opera and vaudeville. That is no secret. In the first edition of "Evelyn Innes" the heroine is "led astray," (father, dear father, come home with me now!) after Act II. of "Tristan and Isolde." Mr. Moore possibly intended the episode as a parallelism of the garden scene. But this Isolde, who is Evelyn herself, must sing the "love death" scene in the last act over the corpse of her stage lover, Tristan. That story proved too much for opera singers and critics alike. Improbable, not to say impossible. It was suppressed in later revisions, a commonplace carriage being substituted as the fête champêtre.

Evelyn has two lovers. She seems cold-blooded in the second affair. Perhaps she was scared at the prospect of twenty. She becomes dissatisfied with her life. Sir Owen bores her; her second man, a Neo-Celt and a musical composer, doesn't wear well, and after weeks of insomnia she turns to religion, which has been only dormant, never dead, within her soul. She goes to confession. Enter Mgr. Mostyn, the most veracious male portrait in the book. At his suggestion she makes a conventual retreat near Wimbledon. We are given a few chapters devoted to convent life, and then Evelyn returns to the world, into the same dreary round of singing, admiration, and sinning. Evidently she will soon be breasting new currents in her desperate swim toward salvation. Her character is well drawn. Moore deserted the brutal simplicities of his earlier or "Mike Fletcher" style for a more elaborated analysis of motives. You not the influence of Joris-Karl Huysmans, who was about 1895 the artistic vogue. Evelyn is a feminine Durtal, sick of life, and fearing the wrath of God. There is padding in the discussions of early church music; Huysmans again. As a literary performance "Evelyn Innes" is admirable. The style is melodious, flexible, felicitous. His third manner, the rhythmic prose of "The Brook Kerith," is not even adumbrated.

Mr. Moore has utilized his experience in the London musical world. Arnold Dolmetsch, if he did not, could have sat for the portrait of Evelyn's father, not as man but as player on spinet and harpsichord. Who was Evelyn? A dangerous question. As far as I can make out, she is a composite of a half-dozen public singers and her chilly self. Composite portraits prove more successful than bald photographic imitations. Any novelist will tell you that. Fancy pinning to the printed page the bewitching vagaries of a Mary Garden! Henry James and Guy de Maupassant combined might compass the portrait, just as it takes four Irishmen combined to see the joke of home rule. But no lesser men could grapple with such a psychic problem. Another character in "Evelyn" called Lady Grimalkin is said to have been intended for the stately Lady de Grey, whose husband was once upon a time interested in conduct of Covent Garden. Sir Owen Asher—he may be one of the many sides of the novelist—is clearly painted at the beginning, but the colors fade before the close. Worse, he becomes a bore with his vanity, his agnosticism, his lack of backbone, physical and spiritual. I believe that it was his harping on art and religion that drove Evelyn into the church. For one thing, he treated her with too much delicacy; that prim young woman—essentially a puritan—needed lusty reproach. Neither of her lovers ruled her, because neither Asher nor Dean was a man of force. Her sentimental flirtation with religion would have been dissipated if Sir Owen had given her what Paddy gave the drum. She might have thrown the clock at his head, but surely they would have kissed and made up after each emotional crisis. Such things happen in the best regulated of musical families.

The first half of the story fascinates on rereading; the discussion of the various schools of singing is interesting, and while at no place does Mr. Moore exhibit the marvelous virtuosity displayed by Gabriele d'Annunzio in his exposition of Tristan and Isolde, (in his "Trionfo della morte") there are many jeweled pages of descriptive writing. The book is permeated by all sorts of pessimism from Omar to Schopenhauer, and life set forth from the viewpoints of both the ascetic and the epicurean. The subconscious, which is the reservoir of every writer's certitudes, has inspired this Irishman of genius in his portrait of the ecclesiastic, Mgr. Mostyn. Mr. Moore's Protestant forebears did not guide his brush on that particular canvas. As a whole, he has caught the right atmosphere. He is a master of moods, and he has spilled the soul of the cold, self-seeking prima donna, a woman mastered by her whims and a woman utterly incapable of self-development without masculine aid and tyranny. Mildred Lawson is Moore's full-length portrait of a female egotist. There is betimes something lovable in Evelyn; in Mildred, nothing. Do such young women exist? Henry James in writing of Ibsen declared that you might take down Hedda Gabler at any London dinner party. And you may sit next to Evelyn Innes at a concert in New York, or see Mildred Lawson in a Fifth Avenue picture gallery. My advice is—dodge 'em both.

THE WEEK'S MUSIC

The musical event of the week will be the open-air performance of "Aida" at the Sheepshead Bay Speedway tonight. There will be an ensemble of 1,500 people, a chorus of 300 voices under the leadership of William Tyroler and A. Bimboni, and a ballet of 100 dancers. In Radames's triumphal return in the second act oxen, camels, elephants, and horses will add realism to the scene.

The principal parts will be sung by Marta Rappold as Aida, Cyrene Van Gordon as Amneris, Marie Tiffany as the Priestess, Manuel Salazar as Radames, Riccardo Stracciari as Amonasro, Andreas de Segurola as Ramfis, Natale Cervi as the King, and Luciano Rossini as the Messenger.

The production will be under the supervision of Andreas de Segurola and Fortune Gallo. Settings have been designed and painted by Carmine Vitolo and a great stage has been constructed under the direction of Ben Altieri. The stage manager is Luigi Albertieri, and Giorgio Polacco will direct the orchestra of 100 musicians and the stage band of seventy-five pieces.

The performance will be given under the patronage of the Italian Consul General in New York, Comm. Romolo Tritteni, for the benefit of those who suffered from the recent earthquake in the Florence district.

The next to the last week of the Stadium Symphony concerts at City College will begin this evening, with Arnold Volpe conducting. The program will include:

Arthur Middleton, basso, Vivian Holt, soprano, and Ernest Davis, tenor, as the soloists. Mr. Middleton will sing the "Largo al factotum" from "The Barber," Miss Holt the second act aria from "Louise," and Mr. Davis the "Rigoletto" romanza. For the orchestra Mr. Volpe has selected the "Ruy Blas" overture, "Cavalleria Rusticana" fantasie, Délibes's "Sylvia" ballet suite, Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, Liszt's Rhapsodie No. 6, and Lacome's March "Tzigane."

Concerts will follow on every evening of this week and next.

The second of the series of international park sings arranged by the National League for Woman's Service in co-operation with the International Music Festival Chorus will be held today in four city parks—Seward Park, Schurz Park, Washington Square Park, and Columbus Park—beginning at 4 o'clock in each place. In addition to orchestral numbers there will be the singing of folk songs by Italians, Czechoslovaks, Jews and Poles.

Cantor Joseph Rosenblatt will give a recital this afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Hotel Lorraine, Edgemere, L. I., the proceeds of which will be devoted to charity. It will be his only appearance in the Rockaways this season.

CONCERTS AND OPERA.

An opera comique company from the Gaieté Lyrique in Paris, which was to make a limited tour of the United States, has deferred its proposed visit until the year following the next season.

Members of the Musicians' Club of New York have been asked to subscribe for seventeen Saturday nights next season, as the MacDowell does on other days, for the Omnibus Box at the Metropolitan.

Officers of the National Musical Managers' Association this year include Charles L. Wagner, President; Loudon Charlton and George Engles, Vice Presidents; Milton Aborn, Treasurer, and Catherine A. Bamman, Secretary. The Directors are Messrs. Haensel, Coppitus, Judson, Gallo, and Wessels.

John O'Sullivan, the Irish tenor, heard last season with the Chicago Opera Company, will make a concert tour this [illegible] under the management of F. J. [illegible] of Boston.

PLANNING NEW SEASON.

Micheline Kahn, harpist, will make an American tour under the direction of the French-American Association for Musical Art, together with Yvonne Astruc, violin, pupil of Georges Enesco.

Alma Gluck and Efrem Zimbalist will appear only in joint recitals this season. Mabel Garrison will be "leading coloratura singer" at the Metropolitan. Sophie Braslau will sing on tour with the Chicago Opera.

Albert Spalding, Jacques Tribaud, and Eddy Brown, violinists, are in the Summer musical colony at Long Branch, rivaling the famous group of pianists headed by Bauer and Gabrilowitsch at Bar Harbor.

The Flonzaley Quartet, now at Lake Placid, will start their sixteenth season in America next October. Ugo Ara, viola, who served with the Italian Army during the war, will take his old place again.

Maggie Teyte, who has been singing in "Monsieur Beaucaire" in London, will return here in October with the Society of American Singers at the Park Theatre in "Mignon" and "Madam Butterfly."

Pablo Casals, the 'cellist, is announced to play next Winter with the New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Cleveland, and Detroit Symphony Orchestras. He will also give several recitals in this city.

DISCUSS JUILLIARD FUND.

Following discussions of the Juilliard bequest, by Otto H. Kahn and Artur Bodanzky, a third suggestion has been made by Josef Stransky, conductor of the Philharmonic Society, who prefaced his remarks by saying the proposals already made as to the use of the great fund seemed to him eminently wise.

"However, an idea does occur to me," said Mr. Stransky, "which has always seemed fraught with possibilities for America, and that is the plan, which has been definitely worked out in Europe, of a sort of 'super-school' for the best pupils of other conservatories. The students at the super-school would receive the highest polish of education at this institution. Their presence there would be in the nature of a reward for their abilities.

"For violin teachers, this school would have men of the type of Auer, now in America; Sevcik, of Prague, and Marteau, who is in Switzerland. Artists of the same standard would be in the other departments. Imagine the influence, for example, of a man like Rachmaninoff teaching composition to American students who had proved themselves to have exceptional talent.

"As for the late donor's suggestion that part of the bequest be used to help those who cannot hear good music at the regular prices, I may speak a word of indorsement for that idea. It has been my privilege, as conductor of the Philharmonic, to assist in ventures of this nature during the past four years in New York. The Juilliard bequest is a great fund which will undoubtedly benefit the whole musical world, as there can be no doubt that it will be used with all the generosity and wisdom of the man whose name it bears."

RECALLING THE SEGUINS.

Memories on both sides of the world were stirred by the announcement in London not long ago of a new scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, given by a student of nearly a century ago. It was at the annual meeting of that institution that the facts were told by a speaker who said that more than usual significance attached to a bequest which reached them from across the Atlantic, after a long passage of years. It seemed like the "touch of a vanished hand," for the original owner was a prominent vocal student at the Academy in 1826. His name, Edward Seguin, appeared frequently in their programs of the time. He married a fellow-student, Miss Anne Child, and the two artists eventually sought their fortunes as operatic singers and managers in America.

The Academy, however, was evidently never forgotten and after the passing of a couple of generations, their benevolent intentions toward it were now fulfilled, after ninety-two years. During that space of time the original amount might have shrunk somewhat. But it was the kindly feelings of these old students toward their Alma Mater which counted, and so forcibly appealed to them. The scholarship, to be called the "Edward and Anne Seguin," was for singers born either in the United States or in the United Kingdom, and the sum, over £900—some $4,500—would presently be invested in their interests.

"PINAFORE" IN BROADWAY.

Here in the heart of old New York, it has just been announced, "H. M. S. Pinafore," the nautical comic opera of Gilbert and Sullivan, will "drop anchor" in the near future aboard a former wartime "land battleship." Under the captaincy of the New York War Camp Community Service, the opera will be staged on the U. S. S. Recruit in Union Square, and New Yorkers will have an opportunity to hear the famous old lines sung in the strangely modernized setting of an up-to-date dreadnought.

Professional singers recruited by the Volunteer Entertainment Bureau of the Community Service will take the leading rôles in Gilbert's "gallant crew," and members of various community singing groups in the city are being drilled for the chorus.

BOSTON SYMPHONY BOOK.

Bound numbers of the "Boston Symphony Orchestra Program, 1918-19," just issued by W. H. Brennan, manager, and G. E. Judd, assistant manager, from Symphony Hall, Boston, give a complete record of the thirty-eighth season of America's most famous instrumental organization. Henri Rabaud was the conductor throughout the year, and he refused an invitation to remain only because the constant rehearsal gave him no leisure and he preferred to resume his work in Paris as a composer. Philip Hale of Boston furnished the weekly commentary; there were 104 pieces of music produced, and Mr. Hale's text fills most of the 1,352 pages. The conductor of the orchestra next season will be Pierre Monteux.

AMONG THE MUSICIANS.

The New York Hospital Society recently gave at the Post-Graduate Hospital its three hundredth performance. In nine years it has provided music for 106,000 sick persons.

The Workmen's Circle Musical Society offers free training in two orchestras—one for symphony players, the other for mandolins—meeting at 143 East Third Street.

Harold Flammer has published Anna Case's original "Song of the Robin," based on the bird's notes at her Mamaroneck home, and first sung by her at Ocean Grove.

Joyce Kilmer's "Trees," set to music by Carl Hahn, has been called "a great song of the war period." The poem was dated earlier, and Kilmer, who died in action, never heard his song.

"The Hymn of the Homecoming," a song dedicated "To the Memory of George Knight Houpt," has been published in Buffalo. Words and music are by Philip Becker Goetz.

The Bamberger August Sale of Oriental Rugs

In the Auditorium, Sixth Floor, where it will continue throughout the month.

How gorgeous is the Auditorium these days.

The magnificent collection of Oriental rugs which we have assembled there has virtually turned the Auditorium into a Persian Rug Mart. One can almost visualize the weavers, and their silken Oriental masterpieces offered for sale.

Here we are presenting at prices from 10% to 25% lower than regular, every Oriental piece in our entire collection from the smallest throw piece to the largest rug.

There can be no question about the fact that fine Oriental rugs are scarce, and very high in price. In some instances the Oriental sources of supply have been entirely wiped out.

Women Will Wear Low Shoes Until New Year's at Least

Women of the active age and maids of the younger set seem determined to lengthen the reign of the low-cut shoe. Pumps and Oxfords will not retire with the arrival of November's cooler days this season, but will still be worn even when snow flurries make it necessary that bright colored spats do duty as shoe-tops.

Fashion's devotion to the low shoe is easily explained—it is surely more comfortable, and a pretty ankle loses none of its charm when displayed in silken hose and a graceful pump or smart Oxford. Then, too, in these days of advancing prices, the difference in cost is something to remember.

L. BAMBERGER & Co

WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

IN THE FILM FORUM.

J. A. QUINN, who has come from the Coast to assume his duties as President of the Motion Picture and Theatrical Co-operative Association of the World, Inc., has expressed himself about the screen in language which, even in this day of strong speech, may be called positive. One of his recent utterances was to the effect that the motion picture business was "the biggest joke in the world." Naturally this statement has been challenged, and now Mr. Quinn comes out with the following:

"Exception has been taken to my statement that the motion picture business, as it is being run today, is the biggest joke in the world. True, in capitalization it stands fourth or fifth among the industries, and it is the most direct medium for reaching the public—but the producers, the way they are handling the business, have made it a huge joke.

"Isn't it making a joke of the industry for the producers to take girls who have become their favorites, and, despite the fact that they are not qualified to have leading parts, make them stars?

"Isn't it making a joke of the industry to spend huge sums of money on advertising and publicity that is false and misleading in order to create a demand for the pictures in which these fake stars appear?

"Isn't it making a joke of the industry for producers to mutilate deliberately the works of authors to suit their own whims or to make them fit their stars because these stars are unable to measure up to the standards of the characters conceived by the authors?

"What else is it but a joke that the producers are making of the industry when they take stories that need only two or three reels to make the pictures interesting and entertaining, and stretch them into five or more reels that make them tiresome?

"Do the producers think they are helping the industry by squandering thousands and thousands of dollars in this wasteful padding and by extravagance, and then looking to the exhibitors and the patrons for the money to pay for it?

"It surely cannot be said that they are placing the industry on any higher plane by flooding the market with cheap copies of successful artists. Nor do they add anything to the good name of the business by copying, in addition to the style of the pictures in which the artists were successes, their advertising, their press notices and their various still pictures and posters.

"Can it be said that the producers are doing other than making a laughing stock of themselves by accusing, either directly or through their agents, the public as being responsible for the evils now existing in the industry?

"How do they think they are going to maintain the patronage of the public if they keep on placing the blame for their own mismanagement, ignorance of business principles, unfair dealing, &c., on those who pay to see motion pictures?

"What do they expect to gain by attacking the women of this country, who are only asking that they be given better pictures?"

"The fact that their visions have been dimmed and their senses dulled by the money they have made is no excuse for their keeping on doing the things they are doing.

"They must not lose sight of the fact that the money they have made and are spending in such a foolish and reckless manner has come from the public.

"The patrons are starving for better pictures and they are going to get them. A thorough housecleaning of the industry is needed, and the power that will propel the broom will be the demand of the motion picture patrons."

Mr. Quinn's phrase, "the greatest joke in the world," is just a phrase. It is not to be taken literally, and, like most explosive characterizations, it is weak in description. The total or average output of the motion picture mills is about equal in quality with that of the drama factories or the fiction plants. The exceptional plays, novels, and stories are better than the comparatively few exceptional photoplays, but in the general field of public entertainment the screen does not have to hang its head before the stage, book, or magazine. Nor is the motion picture business, on the whole, more or less of a joke than any other business of providing amusement for America's hundred million.

All of this, however, is not saying anything especially favorable about the screen, and does not acquit it of the particular charges brought by Mr. Quinn. Concerning the statement that producers make stars of girls "who have become their favorites" the writer can say nothing except that there is no obvious reason why some girls have become stars. Certainly they have not been featured because of their acting abilities.

A great deal of the motion-picture advertising is undoubtedly "false and misleading," and the works of authors more often than not have been "mutilated" to suit something other than artistic standards. That most photoplays are entirely too long is an opinion which has been reiterated by the writer, and surely no one would honestly deny that the motion-picture business has been hurt by pirates. Also, when the producers blame the public for the inferior quality of photoplays the natural reply is a smile.

When one speaks of producers, however, he lumps good and bad, or better and worse, together. Among those who make moving pictures there are some who seem to be trying to "declare dividends in art as well as in cash," and that the screen is improving is evident to any one who follows it from year to year.

It is to be hoped, therefore, that the organization of which Mr. Quinn is the President will give neither peace nor quarter to the evils in the motion-picture business, and, at the same time, will recognize and encourage what is worth while.

Concerning false and misleading advertising, there is an article in the current Photoplay Magazine entitled "That Sly, Dishonest Sign," which deals with the practice of exhibitors who attempt to draw crowds by means of salacious and flamboyant posters which do not describe the nature of the films they advertise. The article, which is by Jamel Priest of the Better Photoplay League, shows what has actually been done by some exhibitors in Chicago. This is one matter in which it is good for people to be sophisticated.

Is reel action real? Charles Ray was recently confined to his home for several days because of bruises received when he fell on a staircase in one of the scenes of "Crooked Straight," a forthcoming Ince production.

RIVOLI—"Wagon Tracks," an Artcraft picture, with William S. Hart, by C. Gardner Sullivan, directed by Lambert Hillyer, with a cast including Jane Novak and Robert McKim; the scene being along the old Santa Fe trail from Kansas to New Mexico; "Separate Trails," a Bruce scenic; the Pictorial; "Foxy Ambrose," a Poppy comedy; Louis Hosmer's "Southern Rhapsody" by the orchestra, Erno Rapee and Joseph Littau conducting alternately; Tosti's "Dreams," sung by Greek Evans; an aria from Massenet's "Herodiade," sung by Athene Buckley; George Leduc's "Gavotte" played on the organ by Professor Firmin Swinnen.

RIALTO—"The Peace of Roaring River," a Goldwyn picture, with Pauline Frederick, by George Van Schaik, directed by Victor L. Schertzinger, with a cast including Thomas Holding, Hardee Kirkland, Corinne Barker and Lydia Yeamans Titus; the Magazine; Major Hack Allen's "Lion Trapping"; "Cupid's Hold-up," a Christie comedy; a selection from "Aida," played by the orchestra, Hugo Riesenfeld and Nat W. Finston conducting; Moya's "Song of Songs," sung by Gladys Rice; a bass solo by Emanuel List; a marimbaphone duet by Frank Wolf and Harry Edison; Frances Dubois's "Allegro con Spirito," played on the organ by Arthur Depew.

PLAZA—Today, tomorrow and Tuesday, "The Better Wife," with Clara Kimball Young; Wednesday and Thursday, "The Pagan God," with H. B. Warner; Friday and Saturday, "Upstairs and Down," with Olive Thomas.

STRAND—"Choosing a Wife," an English production based on "The Elder Miss Blossom," a novel, released by the First National Exhibitors Circuit; "Sinbad the Sailor," described as "a humorous fantasy with a juvenile cast"; "The Ghost Coast," an Outing-Chester picture; the Topical Review; "Topics of the Day"; the Jewel Song from "Faust," sung by Eldora Stanford; Shenberg's "Her Danny," sung by Richard Bold; Gounod's "Faust Fantasy," played on the organ by Herbert Sisson and John Hammond; excerpts from Herbert's "Mademoiselle Modiste," played by the orchestra, Carl Edouarde conducting.

GEORGE M. COHAN—D. W. Griffith's "peace edition" of "Hearts of the World," including "a visualization of the League of Nations," beginning tomorrow night, announced for one week only.

BROADWAY—Mack Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," and the Sennett Bathing Girls, seventh week.

LOEW'S NEW YORK—Tomorrow, "A Sagebrush Hamlet," with William Desmond; Tuesday, "A Man of Honor," with Harold Lockwood; Wednesday, "The World Aflame," with Frank Keenan; Thursday, "An Ace in the Saddle," with Harry Carey; Friday, "The Bramble Bush," with Corinne Griffith, and "The Girl Alaska," with Lottie Kruse; Saturday, "The Grey Horizon," with Sessue Hayakawa; Sunday, "The Four-Flusher," with Hale Hamilton.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET—Tomorrow, Tuesday and Wednesday, "A Man's Fight," with Dustin Farnum; Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, Sunday, "Hay Foot, Straw Foot," with Charles Ray.

COMING PHOTOPLAYS

SELECT PICTURES announces the following for release this month: "The Undercurrent," with Guy Empey, directed by Wilfrid North; "The Spite Bride," with Alice Thomas, directed by Charles Giblyn; "The Perfect Lover," with Eugene O'Brien, directed by Ralph Ince.

The last two named are Selznick productions.

The first ten productions to be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under its selective booking system, beginning Sept. 1, are: "The Witness for the Defense," with Elsie Ferguson, directed by George Fitzmaurice, scenario by Ouida Bergere from the play by A. E. W. Mason; "The Valley of the Giants," with Wallace Reid, directed by James Cruze, scenario by Marion Fairfax from the story by Peter B. Kyne; "The Misleading Widow," with Billie Burke, directed by John S. Robertson, scenario by Frances Marion from the play "Billeted," by F. Tennyson Jesse and H. M. Harwood; "The Market of Souls," with Dorothy Dalton, a Thomas H. Ince production, written by C. Gardner Sullivan and directed by Joseph de Grasse under Mr. Ince's supervision; George Loan Tucker's "The Miracle Man," based on the play by George M. Cohan from the story by Frank L. Packard; "The Third Kiss," with Vivian Martin, by Hellodore Tenno, scenario by Edith Kennedy, directed by Robert G. Vignola; "Stepping Out," with Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince production, written by C. Gardner Sullivan and staged by Fred Niblo under Mr. Ince's supervision; "Told in the Hills," with Robert Warwick, by Marah Ellis Ryan, scenario by Will M. Ritchey and directed by George Melford; "Widow by Proxy," with Marguerite Clark, by Catherine Chisholm Cushing, scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers and directed by Walter Edwards; "The Egg Crate Wallop," with Charles Ray, by Julien Josephson, directed by Jerome Storm under Mr. Ince's supervision.

The second Emerson-Loos photoplay starring Constance Talmadge will be a screen version of Clyde Fitch's "The Bachelor," with a cast including Bee Palmer, Wallace McCutcheon, Jeanette Horton, Harda Daube, Jack Kane, William Eville, Lincoln Plummer, and Mary Whitman. David Kirkland is the director.

Within the next few weeks World Pictures will release "When Bear Cat Went Dry," a screen adaptation of Charles Neville Buck's novel of the same name.

While in London Richard A. Rowland, President of Metro, acquired the screen rights to five Drury Lane melodramas, "The Best of Luck," "Hearts Are Trumps," "The Hope," "The Great Millionaire," and "The Marriage of Mayfair." All will be produced by Metro in this country.

One of the next Paramount-Drew comedies will be "A Sisterly Scheme," in which Mrs. Drew, Nell Tracy, who played the cute little thing in "Bunkered," and John Cumberland, the victim in "Up in Mabel's Room," will have the principal parts. All are now at Lake George making scenes for the picture.

"Eyes of Youth," in which Marjorie Rambeau appeared on the stage, is being made into a photoplay with Clara Kimball Young in the leading rôle and William Courtleigh in the part of the Italian impresario. Albert Parker, whose latest work was "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," is directing.

Clyde Fitch's "The Climbers," in which Amelia Bingham was seen some years ago, is being turned into a screen play by Vitagraph with Corinne Griffith in the principal part.

The story for Elsie Janis's first photoplay, "Everybody's Sweetheart," was written by Frances Marion in collaboration with Edmund Goulding and Miss Janis herself.

Helene Chadwick will play the leading woman's part opposite Tom Moore in "Heartsease," a picturization of Charles Klein's play.

The screen version of "Huckleberry Finn," produced under the direction of William D. Taylor for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with Lewis Sargent, 15 years old, in the title rôle, has been completed.

Mme. Nazimova has started work on "The Hermit Doctor of Gaya," a screen adaptation made by her husband, Charles Bryant, from I. A. R. Wylie's novel. It will be released by Metro following the "The Brat."

IN THE NEWS NET.

THE showing at the Strand this week of an English film, "Choosing a Wife," probably marks the beginning of the re-entrance of foreign productions into America. There are other evidences that the results of post-war activities abroad are reaching this country. Vitagraph, for example, announces that on Aug. 24 it will release "Her Greatest Performance," with Ellen Terry in the leading rôle, playing the part of an elderly mother, and World Pictures has acquired the American rights to a Herbert Brenon production entitled "12:10," in which Marie Doro is the star. Both of these pictures were made in England.

Some of the foreign companies have already opened their own branch offices here. The Compagnie Cinematographique Albert Dulac has established Rene Sils at 1,265 Broadway as its representative for North and South America to distribute its pictures under the name Les Films Albert Dulac of Paris, and the Swedish Biograph Company, with an office in the Candler Building, has released for general exhibition "The Girl From the Marsh Croft," an adaptation of the novel by Selma Lagerlöf, which has been shown in New York, Boston, and elsewhere, principally before Swedish-American spectators. This company also expects to release soon "The Dawn of Love," which was also made in Sweden and taken from another Lagerlöf novel, "Jerusalem."

All of the pictures made abroad, however, will not be of exclusively foreign manufacture and composition. The extensive plans of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have already been announced, and now comes the news that William A. Brady is ready to begin the production in England of a screen version of "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," a Drury Lane melodrama. Mr. Brady will also start work soon on the first of the six photoplays to be made by him in Paris in association with Film d'Art. The story for this production has been written by Henry Kistemaeckers, but the making of the picture will be directed by an American, George Cowl, and Fannie Ward will have the principal part.

American distributers are also extending their spheres abroad. As an instance, Vitagraph has taken over the Ruffell's system of England, which has headquarters in London and is planning to reach across Europe.

The new Strand Theatre in Brooklyn, at Fulton Street and Rockwell Place, will open for the public on Saturday, Aug. 30, following a private opening on the preceding evening. The photoplay of the occasion will be "The World and Its Woman," by Thompson Buchanan, with Geraldine Farrar in the leading rôle.

The Brooklyn Strand has a capacity of 2,500 people and is said to be one of the best decorated and most completely equipped theatres in the city. Alois Reiser, assistant conducter of the orchestra at the Manhattan Strand, will be its musical director; John Loveridge, manager of the Bushwick Theatre, will be managing director, and J. Victor Wilson, who has charge of publicity for the Manhattan Strand, will also be the press representative for the Brooklyn house.

It is too early to prove anything by the records, but an indication of what may be expected for the motion-picture theatres from prohibition is given in reports from the Goldwyn exchange managers that in the first month of partial dryness attendance at the screen houses has considerably increased. Some exhibitors, it is said, are considering a proposal to permit smoking in their theatres, the hope being that this will attract the lost and straying citizens who formerly spent their idle hours at the bar or in the back room.

Harry Levey, General Manager of the educational department of the Universal Film Company, is to supervise a campaign for the extensive use of motion pictures in the public and private schools throughout the country. It is reported that the chief obstacle to such a movement in the past—the lack of a simple and safe projector meeting the requirements of modest purses and fire-prevention regulations—has been removed by the Nicholas Power Company's development of a satisfactory machine, and that a firm which publishes textbooks has agreed to co-operate in the campaign. A number of persons identified with school boards and committees, among whom is William E. Grady, a District Superintendent in New York, are said to be back of the undertaking.

Although already using two studios near New York, the Selanick Pictures Corporation is building what is described as "the largest studio in the world" in Long Island City. This company also continues to enlarge its staff, the latest addition being Wesley Ruggles, a director.

Rupert Julian, who is well known for his work both before and behind the camera, lately with the Universal Film Company, has signed a contract with Goldwyn and will direct the production of Gertrude Atherton's "Perch of the Devil," which is to be one of the first Ruffell's system of Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc. Goldwyn has also signed T. Hayes Hunter, who succeeded D. W. Griffith at the American Biograph Company and, following work for the stage, produced "The Border Legion," in which Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth were featured. He will direct Rupert Hughes's first picture for Eminent Authors, "The Cup of Fury." A third director engaged by Goldwyn is Wallace Worsley. Another recent addition to the Goldwyn staff, Louis Sherwin, formerly dramatic critic of The Globe, has written a scenario entitled "The Bond of Love," which will be made into a photoplay for Pauline Frederick.

Wallace Reid, who has rapidly lived down his reputation as a matinee idol and won place as a screen pantomimist, has signed a five-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by which he will continue to appear in Paramount pictures at a considerably increased salary reported to be something more than $1,000 a week.

The first part of "Mothers of Men," Edward José's production for Film Specials, Inc., in which Claire Whitney and Lumsden Hare are featured, has been completed, and work has been begun on the second part, in which Martha Manafield and Gaston Glass will play the leading rôles. The picture is divided into sections because the first part deals with German episodes and the second with French. The whole is based on the novel by Henry William Warner and DeWitte Kaplan.

The Zion Films, Inc., has sold the world rights of "Khavah," its screen adaptation of a work by the late Sholem Aleichem, to the National Film Distributers, and the picture, with its name changed to "The Broken Barrier," will soon be released.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is planning to produce films for use in schools, colleges, churches, and social centres. The production and distribution of these non-theatrical subjects will be under the direction of David K. Niles, formerly director of motion pictures for the Milwaukee schools, assisted by Carl H. Carsons.

Earl Emlay, who is said to have invented the Novograph camera with which the slow-motion pictures shown at the Strand are taken, is reported to have improved his machine and promises new results in films to be made for the Motion Picture Producing Company of America.

Two forthcoming subjects of the Ford Educational Weekly are "A Panama Hat," dealing with Panama City, and "God's Handiwork," showing the Canadian Rockies.

William S. Hart, who has signed a two-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, by which he will continue to appear in Artcraft pictures, is at work on a photoplay entitled "John Petticoats."

Marcel Le Picard of the Goldwyn Studios is reported to have perfected a lens formula and equipment by which new out-of-focus effects in close-ups can be produced.

Cocoanut Oil Makes A Splendid Shampoo

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Many soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless) is better than some expensive soaps or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

AFTER WAR, FORGET ITS LESSONS?

History Shows This Country Has Always Destroyed Its Army Once Victory Was Won, Assuming Peace as Permanent

By JOHN WALKER HARRINGTON.

WHAT shall be the permanent peace time army of these United States of America? Will the Powers That Be repeat the history of unpreparedness, solemnly resolve that wars shall be no more, and cut down the military strength to a mere skeleton?

Congress has before it the Administration bill which provides that, even when there are no war clouds on the national horizon, the regular military establishment shall consist of 510,000 officers and men, and that all youths of 19 shall be put in the way of being soldiers by having at least three months' training in the trade of war.

More lessons probably in the way of the need of preparedness were learned when the European conflict was near its close than this country had ever learned before. Even the self-confident braggadocios who believed that 1,000,000 men armed with 1,000,000 muskets would scour these coasts of all enemies, after the manner of the maids who might have essayed to get rid of the sands of the seas with mops, as Lewis Carroll tells us, must have found how ineffectual such a program would have been. We have seen millions of men go from our shores to fight battles beyond the ocean and on foreign soil. The world war has taught us that the world is very small, and very like a mill pond. When the political calm is disturbed by the casting of the stone of war, the disturbance goes in circles in every direction and everybody is involved.

From the cataclysm from which the earth is slowly beginning to recover there may come the great lesson of being prepared in peace against the time of war, but the indications are that this will not come to pass without a prodigious struggle against professional pacifists and conscientious objectors. Against all such and their schemes one should read that none too well-read book, "The Military Policy of the United States," from the pen of the late Major Gen. Henry M. Upton, one of our most skilled masters in the art of war, and the man after whom the camp at Yaphank was named.

Manuscript Long Neglected.

The manuscript of this work was long neglected, and it was not until recent years, through the interest of Elihu Root, then Secretary of War, that it was published in readable form. A voice out of the past, it bears witness to the failure of the United States, after every war of which the author knew, to make due provision against the next one. No military man can make himself popular with the authorities by advocating a real military policy—as we had a chance to see even in our day when a General found himself shunted from one distant home post to another largely because he had sat too long at the feet of General Upton. From Upton's book, indeed, that officer drew material for most of his speeches on the lack of preparedness of the nation. Had his words been heeded, many persons believe that the war in Europe would have ended a year sooner than it did.

The reluctance to a strong military policy goes back to the War of the Revolution, which would never have been won except for the coming of the army and the fleet of France, for toward the close of the struggle George Washington, owing to inadequate provision by Congress and the separate Colonies newly become States, actually had fewer efficient troops than he had when the conflict began. But Washington's solicitude for the future of the nation, as General Upton so well indicated, did not end with the Revolutionary struggle. He urged that the militia of the country, the palladium of our security, should be placed on a footing which would make it a real dependence and that all arms should be standardized.

These earnest warnings of the Father of His Country did not prevent Congress, on the ground that the finances of the nation were exhausted, resolving as follows:

"That the commanding officer be, and he is hereby, directed to discharge all troops, except twenty-five privates to guard the stores at Fort Pitt and fifty-five privates to guard the stores at West Point, and the other magazines, with a proportionate number of officers, no officer to remain in service above the rank of Captain, and those privates to be retained who were enlisted on the best terms, provided that Congress before recess shall not take other measures regarding the disposition of the troops."

"This law," to quote from General Upton, "disbanded all that remained of the Continental Army, save one Battery of artillery, which was raised by Alexander Hamilton in New York in 1776 and which is now in the regular service as Battery F of the 4th Regiment of Artillery."

This historic little command has always kept alive the ideals of the statesman who founded it. It will be remembered that when Washington was crossing the common, which is now the City Hall Park of New York City, he saw a young officer drilling his battery with such skill that he at once inquired who he was. That battery of Hamilton, which soon passed into the hands of other officers, is permitted to wear to this day a peculiar insignia.

Germ of the Army.

So this tiny germ of the army did survive. But it was evident that Congress by merely assigning soldiers to guard stores, mere watchmen only in times of peace, intended to dispense for good with the services of a regular army.

The lessons of the War of the Revolution ought to have been only too clear, for the war had been nearly lost by the raw levies which were called into it, and yet Congress continued year after year to ignore those lessons. It is only fair to add, however, that on the day following the extraordinary comic operatic resolution quoted above Congress did authorize the formation of a regiment of eight companies of infantry and two of artillery for the purpose of protecting the Western frontiers. In fact, it has been the problem of those Western frontiers that has kept the American Army alive. Scarcely had this little force been created when there broke out Shay's rebellion in the heart of the State of Massachusetts. A thousand malcontents moved against the Springfield Arsenal, and national troops were lacking to put it down. The State, however, financed by the merchants of Boston, was able to gather enough volunteer militia recruited for thirty days to put down an uprising which might otherwise have spread throughout the entire State.

The years that followed were filled with disasters to American arms in the Indian wars due entirely to the parsimony of the national legislature in not providing a military establishment.

The expedition of General Harmer against the Miamis in 1790 is an apt illustration of what happened.

According to evidence adduced before the court of inquiry appointed to inquire into the conduct of the General, there were among the militia a great many hardly able to bear arms, such as old, infirm men and young boys; they were not such as might have been expected from a frontier—that is, smart, active woodsmen, well accustomed to arms, and eager and alert to avenge the injuries done to them and their relations.

Then in 1791 came the defeat of General St. Clair sent against the Indians with a force of 1,400 effectives, of whom 632 were killed and 264 wounded. A committee of the House of Representatives duly found that the troops were composed mostly of the substitutes who had retreated in wild disorder without so much as firing a gun.

Although slight increases were made in the military establishment the beginning of the nineteenth century saw little which made for the building up of a trained army. The only bright spot during the first decade was the founding in 1803 of the United States Military Academy at West Point, in which was fulfilled the dreams of Washington, of Hamilton, and of Knox.

War of 1812.

Rumors of war with Great Britain grew apace and Congress groped for an army of 30,000 volunteers, and offered bounties. Up to 1812, however, only seventy-one cadets had been graduated from West Point, and these were engineers. The expansion of the academy course so that all branches of the service could be represented, provided that the total number of cadets at any time did not exceed 250, gave new life to the famous school and put it in the way to provide trained officers for the army and for the militia.

Congress had made substantial increases in our army—on paper—when the War of 1812 came upon us, but as a matter of fact the whole force was only 6,744 strong. The forces of the British in Canada were estimated at 4,500. "Had Congress," observes Upton, "declared that all men owed their country military service, and decided to raise the army immediately, by volunteering or by draft, to 35,000 men, to be held for a term of five years or for the duration of the war, it scarcely admits of a doubt that after six months' training and discipline this force could have occupied Canada and ended the war."

As it was the war lasted for three years and was filled with disasters to American arms, including the disgraceful capture of the national capital. Such feats of valor as the victory of Perry on Lake Erie and the battle of New Orleans redeemed the incompetence and lack of preparedness of the law-making powers.

"Nearly all the blunders committed were repetitions," declared General Upton, "in an aggravated form, of the same blunders in the Revolution, and like them had their origin either in the mistakes or omissions of military legislation.

"In the first war, notwithstanding the steady decline of our military strength, two British armies of more than 6,000 men each were made captive; in the other less than 5,000 men, for the period of two years, brought devastation to our territory and successfully withstood the misapplied power of 7,000,000 of people."

The country did a little better in the series of Indian wars which followed, such as the campaign against Black Hawk, and finally the long struggle against the Seminoles in Florida, a wary and resourceful though not by any means numerous band of fighting men. A regular army, unhindered by the militia which was forced upon the Government for short terms would have made short work of the Indians.

Aftermath of Seminole War.

Nine days after the official announcement of the cessation of hostilities with the Seminoles, Aug. 23, 1842, Congress returned to its familiar rôle of reducing the army and depriving it of its strength and efficiency. It was cut down from 12,139 officers and men to 8,613. The little nucleus of a military establishment did not, however, lose the identity of its regiments.

In summing up the lessons of the war with the Seminoles, Upton declares that Congress, after trying volunteers enlisted for short terms, found it more economical and humane to continue the hostilities with regular troops, enlisted for the period of five years. "Without dwelling on the needless sacrifice of life," he says, "a nation of 17,000,000 of people contended for seven years with 1,200 warriors and finally closed the struggle without accomplishing the forcible emigration of the Indians, which was the original and the sole cause of the war.

"Without dwelling on the needless sacrifice of life, these hard lessons would have been cheaply learned could Congress, at the end of the conflict, have appreciated the value of expansive organization. By withholding from the President authority to add a few enlisted men to the army it committed the same great error as in 1821. We shall see that this error more than doubled the cost and the length of another war, which, despite the mistakes of military legislation, was soon to add to the lustre of our arms."

The Indian wars which had been prolonged had at least the merit of building up the groundwork of an army. There had been at least two years of preparation of the public mind, if not of the military orgnization. The leaven of West Point also had become active. General Upton is of the opinion that the Mexican war lasted far too long. General Winfield Scott, on the other hand, declared that had it not been for the West Point trained officers it would have lasted four or five years, "whereas in less than two campaigns a great country was conquered without the loss of a single battle or skirmish." Yet this same General Scott, according to his account elsewhere, had been obliged in the year 1814 to teach to the officers of his brigade the simple elements of squad drill.

Had the military policy of the nation permitted we might have had at the close of the Mexican war a fair-sized army. Congress, however, cut down the forces to about 10,000 men. This number was increased by a "feeble increment of 3,489 men," but even with another slight addition it was totally inadequate to the patrol and protection of vast new territories, to say nothing of being a means for the defense of the nation. Military operations were confined mostly to putting down Indian outbreaks, and thus in 1861 most of the small army was in widely scattered army posts west of the Mississippi.

State of the Army in 1860.

So at the close of the year 1860, as Upton states, we presented to the world the spectacle of a great nation nearly destitute of military force, although our territory consisted of more than 3,000,000 square miles in which was a population of 31,000,000 souls. The actual number of our far-flung little army was 16,367. The militia, although they were formidable enough on paper, hardly merited the name of a military force. In the Winter of 1860 only five companies were available to man the nine principal fortifications on the Southern border, and not until the first shot was fired on Fort Sumter did the nation awake to the situation which confronted it.

Then without giving any thought to the real needs of equipping and training troops, still confident in the belief that soldiers could be made from the most unseasoned material, the North began raising its levies. The call went forth for 75,000 volunteers enlisting for a period of three months, in which they were supposed to try their prentice hands at a new trade and subjugate a territory of more than half a million square miles. As stated in the call issued by President Lincoln, the volunteers were expected to retake the forts from which the Union forces had been dislodged because of the lack of a sufficient force to maintain even a show of resistance.

The usual story followed upon the close of the civil war. After the parade of the Grand Army of the Republic in Washington there went forth the oft-repeated refrain, "the last great war has been fought." The army of the United States was reduced to a few regiments, and at one time (though in the 70s there was plenty of Indian fighting to be done) it was a skeleton organization of about 25,000 men.

Wedded to Its Idols.

The same spirit of unpreparedness was revealed everywhere. General Upton, who served in the war, called attention both in season and out of season to the fact that the struggle was finally won by the troops seasoned by five years of service.

"Laws whose operation," wrote General Upton, "have been the same in all wars constitute a system, wise or unwise, safe or unsafe, according to their fruit. It cannot be denied that there has sunk into the army the conviction that no change will ever be made for the better. There is ample reason for such a conviction. Ultimate success in all these wars has steeped the people in the delusion that our policy is correct and that any departure from it would be less difficult than dangerous.

"Within the last year (1880) a Senator of the United States standing on a parapet at Fort Monroe and witnessing the firing of worthless, smooth bore artillery, assured the author that we would not have another war in a century."

The war with Spain required the calling into cantonments of the untrained men of the militia, although the greater part of the effective fighting was done by the regulars accustomed to Indian warfare on the Western plains. The year 1899 saw the country with an army of 113,000 men, which was being reduced. The war with Germany came with a demand for the training of raw levies once more, while such seasoned troops as the divisions of regulars and the marines went to bear the first brunt of our fighting.

Now the same old note of reducing the effective force of the defenders of the nation to a minimum is sounded in the halls of Congress and the recurring fight has begun against those who declare that the last great war has been finished and that the nations shall never again require to prepare for self-defense. For those who would consider that matter from the viewpoint of history, General Upton's book may be heartily recommended.

JAILING GOOD FIGHTERS

By WILLIAM V. STEPHENS,
Formerly of the 11th Engineers, U. S. A.

MUCH is being written about "hard-boiled guys" lately. As the methods of enforcing discipline in the American Expeditionary Force are being brought to light, and the public is obtaining a glimpse into the shameful interiors of various prison camps in the vicinity of Paris, a divergence of opinion is manifest as to just who were the "hard-boiled guys." Was it the men of turbulent disposition or the ones who actually conducted the affairs of the jails who deserved this appellation?

Every enlisted man has been familiar for a long time with prison conditions, in and about Paris especially. Some one was always coming along with an interesting tale of barbarity. We did not pay a great deal of attention to these stories as a rule, because most of us had plenty of troubles of our own, and if a man was put in the "clink" it was all part of the day's work, and not a matter of great importance.

It has been stated that "the men who got into trouble in Paris were the insubordinate and drunken element." This was far from being the case. It was rather the unsophisticated who fell into the toils. The other type, which properly should be called "hard boiled," was mostly too wise to get into jail. Wherever they were they always had a wary eye out for an M. P., (military policeman,) or else they were able to cover themselves with a fake pass or some plausible excuse.

When these men reached a town their first inquiry was about the troops billeted in the neighborhood, the name and number of the unit. Pay books were altered to conform to local requirements, so that if one were asked any questions by some curious M. P. the pay books were pretty good proofs that one belonged in that vicinity. The "hard-boiled guys" were picked up very often. They would be absent without official leave, drifting around until their money gave out, and then would return to their regiment, where they would be court-martialed and sentenced.

Penalizing Innocence.

In the prisons of Paris the most innocent and well behaved sometimes found themselves, and received the same treatment as might be given to a cutthroat. One man in my own company, who is a school teacher in New York City, says he was sick and unable to catch the train out of Paris. As he did not want to get into trouble he reported to the Army Provost Marshal, who did not like his story and had him sent to jail. The man in question, after some harrowing experiences, was sent back to his regiment and all charges against him dismissed. This happened while he was returning from Aix les Bains, where he had been on leave for the first time in almost eighteen months of arduous service.

Paris had its alurements. It was a hard place to get away from as long as the money held out. No doubt many men stayed too long and deserved to get picked up. But these boys were entitled to a square deal. Most of them were combat troops. They had played square with their country when there was fighting to be done, and it was no more than right that their country should play square with them when there was playing to be done.

We had to build up a military system almost over night, and in order that it might be effective it had to be the essence of autocracy. Under this system the enlisted man, who when he first joined believed himself as good as any man in the world, came in for some rude shocks. It was a hard proposition to take orders from a man who was your moral, mental, and physical inferior. And when he remonstrated with an officer and was thrown unceremoniously into the "brig," it may be imagined that his sensibilities had received a severe jolt. He had not learned that individualism has no value in the army. He was not a good soldier because a good soldier never questions anything. Over in France, he was not even allowed to question injustice.

How Discipline Was Maintained.

Irrespective of whose feelings were hurt, it was fitting and proper to establish a ruthless system of discipline in the A. E. F. from the start. It was in the interpretation of this system by incompetent officers that the abuse arose. These men were not "hard boiled." They were just holding down bomb-proof jobs.

As I interpret the term "hard boiled," it means "tough" as much as anything else, and it might be applied in a general way to those men of the reckless type who are the real adventurers of the army. They come from all walks of life, and in the A. E. F. their number was legion. Their last concern was their own safety or reputation. At times they were insubordinate, but always in a much more frank and direct way than men of less turbulent disposition. They got drunk on occasion, and when there was nothing in particular to do they went A. W. O. L.

I know of several "hard-boiled" individuals who went A. W. O. L. during the St. Mihiel offensive, but they did not go in the direction of Paris. They took their rifles and "beaucoup" ammunition and headed in a general direction toward Germany as fast as their legs would carry them. These men knew they would be court-martialed when they returned, but that did not bother them so long as they had a chance to get into a fight.

The question arises, are these men good soldiers—these hard-boiled reprobates who have no particular aim except "to soldier"? Lord Kitchener said "go to the guardhouse for the best soldiers," and perhaps there is a germ of truth in his assertion. But that would depend upon what constitutes a good soldier. It is all very well to say that a good soldier is one who obeys orders and keeps himself clean. But courage is the first thing, and I think cheerfulness might almost be ranked as second. And that is just where these "hard-boiled guys" shine. No one will venture to dispute their lazy indifference, but at the same time they do possess those two cardinal virtues, courage and cheerfulness.

All the hard part of such men is on the outside. By instinct they are noble-hearted and brave. They are the peculiar product of a free country and we have not learned how to handle them yet. All the beating in the world could never break the spirit of these men.

UNCLE SAM'S UNPOPULARITY IN SIBERIA

American Style of Intervention Does Not Please Peasantry, Bourgeoisie, Bolsheviki or Reactionaries

By LOUIS D. KORNFIELD.

WHO loves us in Siberia?

Nobody.

My attempts to discover a glimmer of affection for America and Americans in any of the more inhabitable portions of Asiatic Russia led me to the firm conclusion that some might have liked us more if we had intervened less, that some might have disliked us less if we had intervened more, but that, having concluded that we intended to intervene no more nor no less than we actually did, nobody had any use for us at all.

From the unanimity of indifference, resentment, or cynicism that manifested itself in one class of the population or another toward America's part in the scheme, one would think the intervention program, so far as our relation to it was concerned, had sprung from the brain of Postmaster Burleson, rather than from a sincere desire on the part of the American people and the American Government to help the Russian people in Siberia reconstitute and save themselves from the Bolshevist débâcle that had overtaken their fellow-compatriots on the western side of the Urals.

Curiously enough, an antagonistic attitude toward America manifested itself even in those elements that wanted America in Siberia most. They wanted intervention, a lot of it, but all they wanted us to do, from what I could observe, was to bring it to them in a bundle, place it on their front doorstep, announce that the delivery had been made, and then go rapidly away, leaving them to handle the rest. If we insist upon staying around and seeing out of a plebeian curiosity what they are going to do with our donations, they become very much displeased, accept what is delivered with mental reservations and inward resolutions about some mysterious pact that may still be made between Germany, Japan, and Russia, and even forget to thank us.

Our Methods Strange to Them.

Of course they have their reasons. The Russian bureaucratic temper, which permeates most of the official classes with whom we have to do business in Siberia, is deeply sensitive to the qualities of reticence, cautiousness, and system which characterize all our movements in their behalf.

The American way of doing business, systematically and cautiously, is something the Russians of this class like to emulate in order to impress the foreigners with their progressiveness. But they like to emulate it only in form and not in practice. Figuratively speaking, the idea of a receipt for every bit of goods received is as obnoxious to the high-spirited Russian bureaucrat as the necessity of keeping a 9 o'clock appointment at 9 o'clock. It simply isn't done, and when we try to force them to do it, even in their own best interests, they merely shrug their shoulders with a smoldering resentment, and again murmur mysteriously among themselves about the advisability of some future alliance between Japan, Russia, and Germany, and how that combination would be a hard one to beat.

However, not only the bureaucratic Ruesians, but Russians of all other classes, have their grievances against us, and this article will attempt to show how the present peculiarities of Russian political, economic, and social conditions have in one way or another, for one reason or another, made every class in Russian life in Siberia more or less irritated either with our presence in their midst or with our methods of procedure. Indeed, so little gratitude and so much suspicion have we aroused thus far in all groups of Russia by our attempts to help them out of their predicaments that a disinterested observer must find it difficult to travel through Siberia without meditating upon the impracticability, if not the utter absurdity, of trying to help a people who are prevented either by temperament or circumstances over which they have no control from receiving that help in the generous and friendly spirit in which it is proffered.

Treading on Their Nerves.

In many ways their major grievance has been justified. Leaving aside for the moment that class which was entirely opposed to any form of intervention, it is unquestionably true that those who favored intervention have found, to their great dismay, that we are inclined to act according to our own conception of their best interests rather than according to their plans; that we have been inclined to go in with only one foot where they wanted us with both feet, and with both feet where they wanted us only with one foot. The result is that in one direction or another we are treading on their nerves.

Nor has this condition been changed in the least by the recent tripartite arrangement in which Lloyd George, Clemenceau, and President Wilson have agreed to supply the Kolchak Government with arms, munitions, and supplies for his war against the Bolsheviki. Full recognition of the Kolchak Government being still withheld by America, that arrangement does nothing more than lend official sanction to the aid which the Allies and the United States had already been giving to the Kolchak Government for several months unofficially.

Let us see what intervention meant for the various groups that were either strongly for it or strongly against it as a general proposition.

The people in Siberia may be divided roughly into three main social groups—the masses, including the peasant working class elements, making up easily eight-tenths of the population; the bourgeoisie, including the middle class, business and professional elements, and the bureaucracy, including the official and ruling classes. Each group falls roughly into a corresponding political alignment, the peasant and working classes being largely Bolshevist in their sympathies, the middle classes being entirely of moderate and liberal affiliations, except for a suspicious trickling of Bolshevism into the so-called "idealistic" section of the intelligentzia, and the bureaucracy and ruling classes being preponderantly conservative or frankly reactionary in their political tendencies.

The Military Aspect.

Now, by taking in the order named one main effect of intervention on the military side, on the economic side, and on the political side, let us see how each of these major groups either in its social character or in its political character has come to react unfavorably to allied and particularly American efforts in Siberia, no matter how strongly it may have supported intervention as a general principle in the beginning.

The main military effect of intervention has been to create a condition whereby certain parts of Eastern Siberia are becoming occupied, outside of the Czechs, by some 70,000 well-disciplined foreign troops, of which 10,000 are Americans and 60,000 Japanese. In the beginning the bureaucratic and governing elements, dominated by an all-pervading fear of a Bolshevist revival in Siberia, welcomed the presence of these troops on the assumption that an emergency would find the American Government and the associated powers ready to lend their forces to an active war against the Bolsheviki.

The anticipation of that emergency was due to certain dangerous Bolshevist tendencies in the ranks of the Kolchak army itself and other psychological conditions which have contributed greatly in the last month to the sudden collapse of the Kolchak front east of the Urals and the successive retirement of his forces from such vital points as Perm, Ufa, and Ekaterinburg.

Obviously the continuance of such reversals, with consequent defections in the troops inspired by Bolshevist propaganda from within and without, tends to hasten the moment that the Bolshevist high command has long been planning for; the moment that will see the Kolchak army in revolt, unsaddling the Government and releasing a fresh wave of Soviets over Siberia. Unless the Kolchak forces can be re-enforced by new troops, strongly organized, such as the United States and Japan already have on the scene, the Government faces a grave peril. The situation, in short, is one that must turn the eyes of all those who are seriously interested in the maintenance and welfare of the Kolchak Government to a possible revision in America's policy of military noninterference, which has caused so much vexation among Russians realizing the importance of strong military backing, if Bolshevism in European Russia and in Siberia is to be put down and kept down.

Nobody Well Satisfied.

As early as last March, when I was in Omsk, one could hear frequent outbursts of irritation in Russian military circles against this policy of military noninterference that placed 70,000 perfectly good soldiers on Siberian soil, but prevented their use for any purpose of active warfare. Even at that time military circles, being more familiar than the official classes with the conditions in the army at the front, foresaw the possibility of a débâcle in the Government troops such as appears to have been threatened in the last few weeks. Firmly they urged Admiral Kolchak to induce the Allies to give intervention a more active form in its military aspect.

"We are fighting the Allies' war against Bolshevism as well as our own," a Russian General declared to me at that time. "But the Allies can't expect us to save the whole world from Bolshevism with a Bolshevist army."

The cries of the military crowd, however, were silenced by the sager diplomats, who thought it unwise to press the need of troops upon the Allies when all the Governments from whom they were seeking assistance were already being embarrassed by the demand of the peoples at home for immediate demobilization. For the time being, the Omsk statesmen and their representatives at Paris decided to go light on the subject of more direct military assistance, this policy being based largely on the assurances they gave themselves that, once they had induced the Allies to go to their aid with loans and supplies, the Allies would be compelled subsequently to provide all that was essential, including military aid, to protect any stakes they might have planted in the Kolchak régime.

But the bureaucratic and military elements at Omsk and throughout Siberia could not dispel the vision of a possible collapse in the Kolchak troops by any such trust in the future, and their resentment at the policy of military noninterference which held highly disciplined troops in Eastern Siberia that could be so effective in Western Siberia only increased in bitterness as time and events showed that the Kolchak army could not hold on to its far-flung front east of the Urals. The question was constantly raised as to the value of allied forces in Siberia at all, so long as they could not be used for the only purpose for which they really were needed, namely, the prevention of another Bolshevist invasion of Siberia.

Fear of the Japanese.

Nor do these elements find any consolation in the generous and ready offers of Japan to give them as many troops to fight the Bolsheviki as they may desire. No class of Russians wants Japanese soldiers in Siberia, and every increase the Japanese make either in numbers or in the amount of territory they occupy is regarded with suspicions and dread by Bolsheviki and bureaucrats alike. It is much too patent to all concerned that, once very deeply in Siberia, Japan will be a difficult proposition to pull out. However, knowing the gloomy fate it must expect at the hands of the Bolsheviki, the Kolchak Government, if worse came to worse, and American troops still remained unavailable, would gladly accept the yellow peril in preference to the red peril, and would invite Japanese troops to its aid, trusting allied influence and pressure in the Far East to bring within reasonable bounds the compensation that Japan might demand for her services.

Nevertheless the very fact that they are being forced into the arms of Japan only intensifies the bitterness of all loyal supporters of the Kolchak Government against the American policy of military noninterference. Opinion in these circles harps cynically on the conviction, often expressed in the official and semi-official press, that American troops are in Siberia not to help the Russian people down the forces of anarchy and Bolshevism, but merely to prevent Japan from securing any positions of economic or military advantage that might endanger American interests.

At any rate, such are the conditions which have turned the most ardent supporters of intervention for its military value into the most hostile opponents of the passive form it has taken, the responsibility for it all being placed directly at America's doors, where in all truth it may belong, although the motives involved are not precisely what the Russians make them out to be.

Middle Class Attitude.

So much for bureaucratic dissatisfaction in Siberia with the military aspect of our intervention policy. In the middle classes I found a reaction no more favorable, though for entirely different reasons. Just as the military and Government circles believed we sent too few soldiers to Siberia to be of any use, so the middle classes emphatically believed we had too many soldiers in Siberia to be really helpful to the true cause of Russian democracy.

They came to their conclusions from an entirely different position. Their objection to our military policy was a natural development of their antagonism to the course of political events that had taken place in Siberia since the allied forces landed at Vladivostok. To begin with, the Russian middle class, including the liberal bourgeoisie and the intelligentzia, is the stronghold of progressive liberal aspirations. It still thrives, however, on two delusions, one in relation to the political readjustment of the world in general and the other in relation to the regeneration of Russia in particular.

The first concerns itself specifically with President Wilson's Fourteen Points program, which appears to have captivated the faith and support of the Russian educated classes to an extent absolutely unequaled in the educated classes of any of the other countries in the world, not excepting America. For these Russians the Fourteen Points constituted the hope of mankind, the complete fulfillment of several generations of political idealism that had for its goal the creation of an international order out of which a permanently peaceful world could spring. Russian temperament takes any form of idealism seriously. It took the Fourteen Points seriously. These Russians are still convinced that all that is needed to end war, imperialism, and international anarchy is to apply the Fourteen Points literally and faithfully.

The intelligent classes in Siberia are turning against the political and military character of our intervention policy in Siberia. They are deeply sensitive to any contradiction to the Fourteen Points, and they think they find many such contradictions in our Siberian policy. They point to such contradictions in our support of the Kolchak Government, which they oppose as oppressive, anti-democratic, and reactionary. They point to such contradictions in the various forms of intrigue that have been released in Siberia since the landing of the allied forces. They point to such contradictions in the interference of diplomatic "staff work" with the political reorganization of the Russian people along normal and natural lines. Against the presence of large allied military forces on Siberian soil they are particularly bitter, because they regard these forces, now that the war is ended and the Czechoslovak Army has been saved, as means by which foreign powers may juggle the affairs of occupied and adjoining territories to their own especial advantage.

A Bourgeois Delusion.

But how about a protection against Bolshevism? Suppose it overtakes them again? Won't they welcome the aid of foreign force in such an emergency?

No. These questions bring us to the subject of another delusion entertained by the middle class bourgeoisie in Siberia, a delusion that becomes more of a delusion as events increasingly prove that Russian Bolshevism will not succumb to the mere pressure of argument, that for every Russian who may be argued out of Bolshevism ten Russians will argue themselves into Bolshevism. The liberal bourgeois elements in Siberia still believe they need no force to combat Bolshevism; that talk, persuasion, enlightenment will do it; that Russia will find itself best out of Bolshevism, if it is allowed to find itself alone, without any artificial pressure from the outside such as the presence of force always implies.

They hold to this conviction despite the fact that the Bolshevist rule has sustained itself in Russia for nearly two years without interruption, despite the fact that the Aksventyieff Government which the bourgeois liberal elements themselves created in Siberia was thrown out of power because no amount of talk by Aksventyieff and his Ministers about democracy could prevent the foundations of that Government in so far as they were rooted at all in the masses from dissolving into Bolshevism. Unmoved by these experiences, the liberal bourgeoisie persists in its belief that with a free opportunity of "democratic expression," without the compromising pressure of force from one extreme or another, the Russian people will float into a democratic orderly Government of its own accord.

Bolshevism would have fallen long ago in Russia, they contend, if the Soviets had not held themselves in power with force. Democracy would have prevailed in Siberia, they argue, if Aksventyieff had not been hurled out by force. In either case, they are convinced, the force is a form of terrorism by which one kind of despotism or another may accomplish its purpose without ever giving true revolutionary democracy a chance.

On these general principles they want no military intervention in Siberia. They concede the necessity of some troops to guard supplies, &c., but, now that the war is over, they think the United States and Japan have entirely too many soldiers there for that particular purpose. In the foreign troops now in Siberia, whether they be Japanese or American, they see only a possible instrument of imperialistic or reactionary intrigue, or, at best, a means by which the political play between liberalism and reaction, consciously or unconsciously, may be forced into a stalemate from which no democratic progress will be possible.

Viewpoint of the Peasants.

The opposition to the allied military policy of the working and peasant classes, which make up by far the larger part of the population in Siberia, may be reduced to a very simple definition. It is downright weariness of war and all its paraphernalia. Soldiers belong to that paraphernalia, and as such the peasants in Siberia dread and fear them as they dread and fear war itself. The peasant doesn't like the sight of a soldier, whether he be American, English, French, Japanese, or even Russian. All the nightmares of bloodshed, hunger, and death that he has passed through in the last four years he associates with guns and uniforms.

Ignorant of any of the motives or purposes of intervention, he sees the military forces of the Allies only as men in uniforms armed with guns and bayonets, and they symbolize the most horrible thing he can think of—war. No offer of friendship and help, he is firmly convinced, can possibly come in such trappings. He resents soldiers because he resents war. That is true of the masses in general, although a large portion of the masses that is manifestly Bolshevist in its sympathies also feeds its resentment on the conviction that American troops, like all other troops, are in Siberia merely to crush the proletariat revolution and prevent it, by a steady support of the Kolchak Government, from coming to life in Siberia again.

Even last May, when the Bolsheviki in Siberia were still being held fairly well in check, it was obvious in Vladivostok that if the Allies decided to withdraw their troops, the last boatload of soldiers would hardly be out of the harbor before the Bolsheviki would roll down the hills and seize the city. The restraint that the Bolsheviki feel in the presence of the allied forces only increases their bitterness, and makes our soldiers all the more unpopular with the poorer classes, that look to their Bolshevist leaders for political and economic salvation.

Economic Policy's Handicaps.

But if our military policy has no friends in Siberia, certainly our intervention in its economic effects ought to have inspired a show of gratitude from at least some one or another section of the population that looks to America for the reconstruction of railroads and for such general assistance as would enable the country to reorganize its economic life. Theoretically and normally, that would be the case. But conditions in Siberia are neither theoretical nor normal. They have a special character, which makes the results far different from that which we would expect under more accustomed circumstances.

True enough, all elements of the population welcomed economic aid, the bureaucrats because the rebuilding of roads and reorganization of economic agencies would give substance to bureaucracy, the middle class because these things would quicken the currents of industry and commerce and make life generally more normal and progressive, the lower classes because it would create employment and wages for the workers and the city and make it worth while for the peasant in the country to harvest his wheat if he had any wheat to harvest, or to harvest it for a landowner if he had none of his own.

How has it worked? The principal and practically only effect of intervention on the economic life of Siberia thus far has been the taking over by Commissioner John F. Stevens and the American Railway Engineers of the reconstruction of the Trans-Siberian Railway. Upon the reconstruction and reorganization of that road depend all the factors of Siberia's economic development and strength. In taking over the reconstruction work, the Stevens Commission, however, also took over the technical administration and supervision of the road, as the Commissioner found it impossible to carry his work rapidly and successfully as long as he had to be interfered with in any way by the loose and inefficient methods of Russian management.

Bribery Intrenched.

To understand this phase of the situation, one must recall that the Government, military and bureaucratic circles under the old régime thrived on bribery and extortion to an extent that made their very simplest operations a synonym for corruption. Well, the bureaucratic soul has not been cleansed in the least by the revolution. What was true of it before the revolution is true of it today. It was true of the Trans-Siberian Railroad when Commissioner Stevens appeared on the scene. It was a household jest in Siberia that the railroad was run partly on coal, partly on wood, but mostly on "vsiatka," which is the Russian word for bribe.

Before the Stevens Commission interfered with it, no motion along the road was possible unless the palms of the officials were as well greased as the wheels of the cars. From top to bottom the Railroad Administration suffered fom this disease, its entire anatomy being penetrated and shot through with veins and arteries of corruption that communicated themselves in a thousand ways from the poorest paid conductor to the highest officials in the Ministry of Communication.

If you were a large shipper of goods, aside from the regular fixed rates of transportation, you would require a barrel of rubles to get an assignment of car space from some division superintendent. Having procured the cars, the "nachalnick," or station master, would have to palm another "vsiatka" to bring the cars from the yard to some convenient siding where they could be loaded. Still another "vsiatka" would be required for the loading of the cars; another to have the cars moved from the siding to the main track where they could be attached to some train; another for the dispatcher before he would release the train; another for the engineer to see that none of the goods, if breakable, and too near the locomotive, were jarred excessively in transportation; another for the conductor to see that none of the goods were stolen.

The same process must be gone through with by the consignee at the point of destination before he receives his goods. The total cost of transportation in the end amounts to so many times the regularly fixed charge that merchants feel justified in charging a price for their goods that is six or ten times the price that they paid for them. Imagine a condition of economics that must accept bribery as one of the inevitable factors in the cost of living. That's what happened in Siberia until American supervision of railroads suddenly started to interfere with it.

Americans Fought Corruption.

Wherever American control or supervision entered it hurled the system of corruption skyward. Not only railroad officialdom, but the whole bureaucratic and official class became bitterly antagonistic. Naturally so, because any influence that struck at bribery as a principle struck at the very roots of bureaucratic and official existence where many years of custom and habit had made bribery a legitimate source of emolument and compensation for services and conveniences rendered. At one blow American became anathema, especially to that whole section of upper officialdom that lived parasitically on railroad operations and now found itself completely ousted from a rich source of revenue which could not be replaced in any other direction, as the Trans-Siberian, poor and depleted as it was, was the only piece of machinery still running through the wreckage of revolution and Bolshevism.

Needless to say, economic intervention has won us no friends in the bureaucratic class—only enemies. It was an instance where we were wanted only with one foot, and we insisted upon stepping in with both feet. They wanted our supplies and our skill, but to their dismay we insisted upon running things also.

Not only in the upper ranks of railroad administration but in the lower ranks, too, we were heartily condemned for our interference with management. The whole "nachalnick" class, including station masters, dispatchers, and under-officials, were antagonistic to the penetration of any influence that made

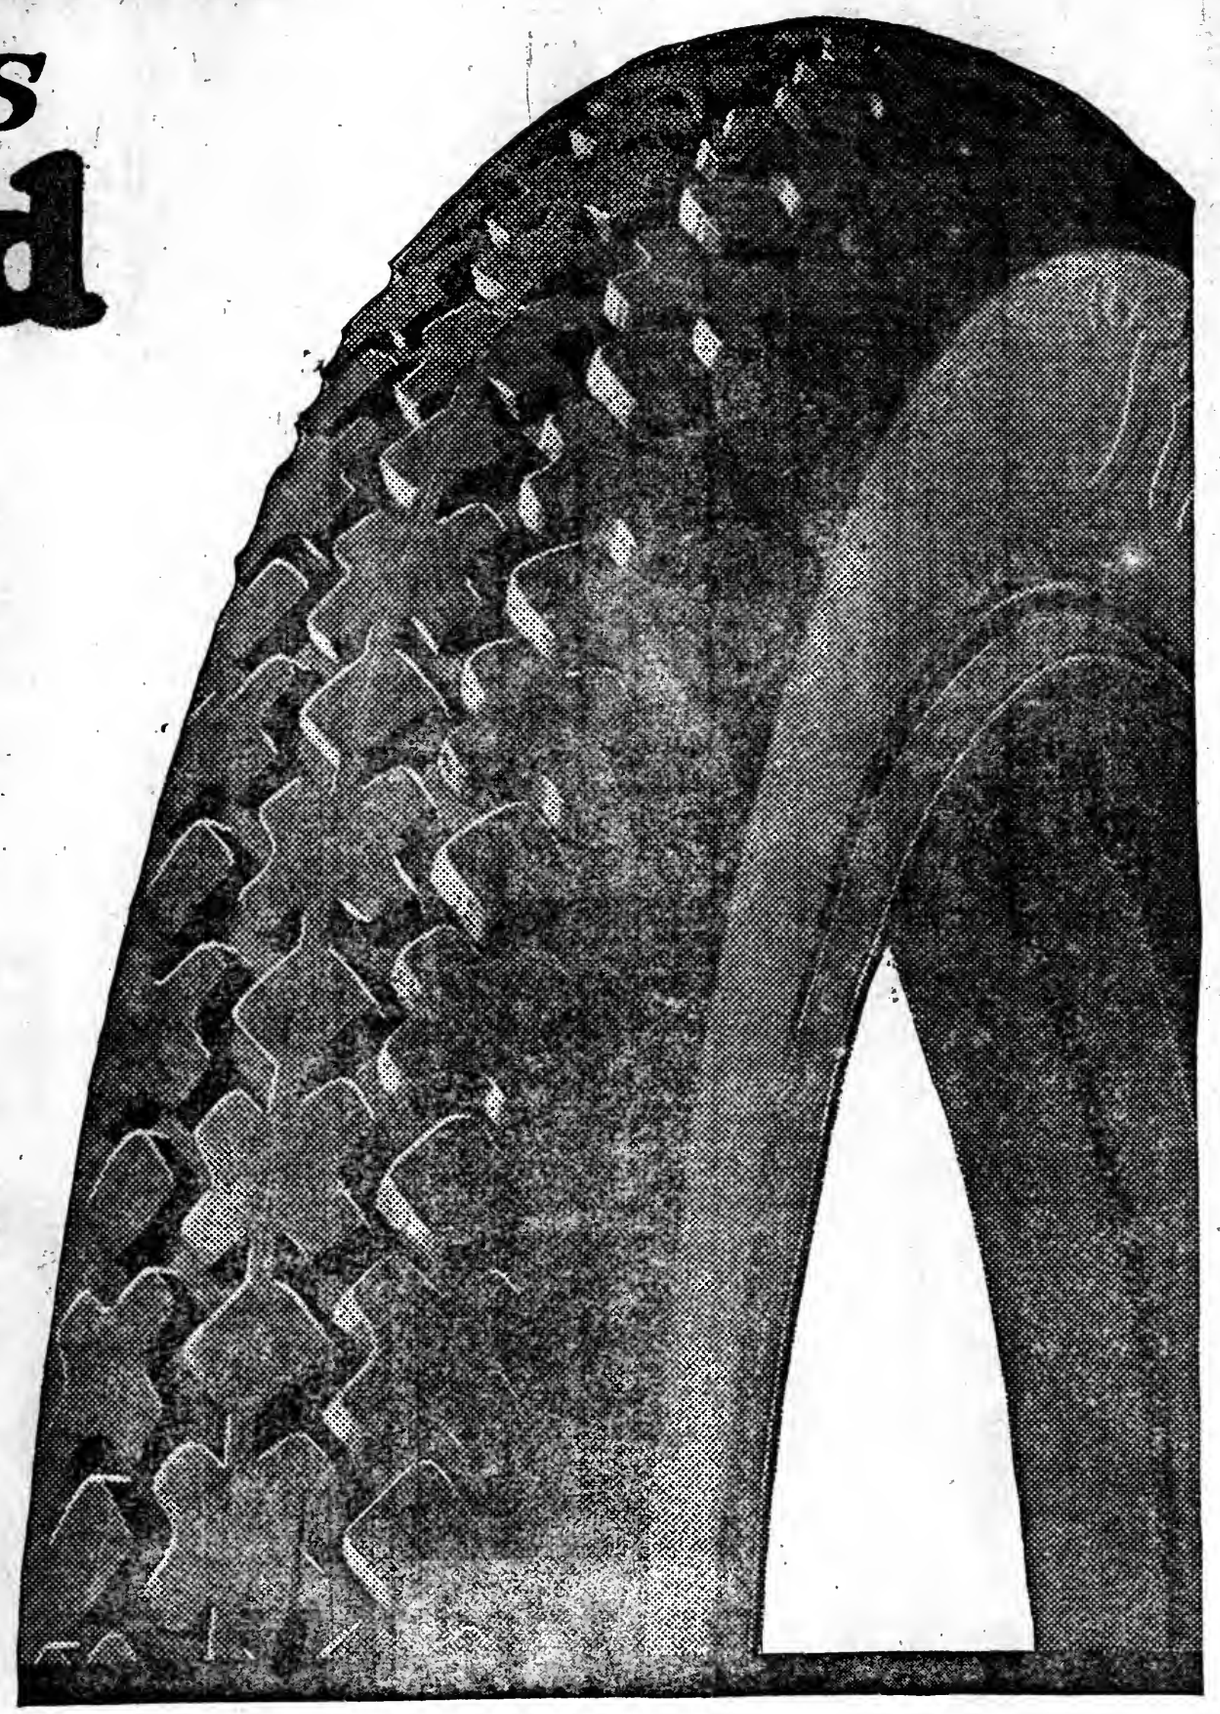
"Sells on Sight"

That's what Dealers say about this New Cord



BECAUSE—it's the first of the new standard oversize cords—so big that it leaves no room for comparison.

You get a lot more tire, which means much more mileage. The cross-section is wider, the air capacity is greater, there is much more material—rubber and cord. And all these extras don't appear in the price. See why below.

The new extra heavy non-skid tread is another feature that makes this tire "sell on sight." You can see and feel the extra volume of choice rubber. And if you are something of an engineer you can tell on sight that the tread angles will prevent skid, slide or spin. Whether you are an engineer or not, you will know as soon as you drive these tires that they have real traction, that they do hold the road.

And this cord is as much better inside as it is outside. Firestone builders soak the cords in rubber so they become saturated. Then they put an extra coat of gum between the layers of cord.

It not only "sells on sight" but it delivers mileage and the kind of service that wins permanent users.

How Can Firestone Give So Much More for the Money?

BECAUSE—Firestone is building more mileage per dollar into tires than other makers. And that is because Firestone has done big, practical things in the way of organizing man power and capital.

The 16,000 Firestone workers are doing more per man than the workers in any other organization, so far as we can determine. They are putting more into their work because they are getting more out of it—the things that make for happiness, efficiency.

Over 90% of them own stock in the company.

Thousands own their homes; Firestone Park is the "fireside" of Akron.

So, whether it is the Firestone man in Singapore buying rubber and shipping it direct, whether it is the tire builders in the great Firestone factories at Akron or the men in the field serving you through your dealer, you can count on it that they are giving car-owners most miles per dollar—bigger value this year than it has ever been possible to deliver before.

Let your dealer show you this Firestone Cord.

This is the Firestone Year

BEST MOTOR ROADS TO DELAWARE WATER GAP

Recent investigations of touring conditions to the Delaware Water Gap by the Chief Roadman of the Automobile Club of America show that from Newark to Morristown, via Springfield, Chatham, and Madison, the road is very good. The lower route, from Springfield over the Passaic Valley road through Summit, Liberty Corners and Far Hills to Chester, is becoming badly worn in places, and is not as satisfactory as the Chatham-Morristown route. From Chaster, through Long Valley and over Schooley Mountain to Hackettstown is fair going; Schooley's Mountain is quite good, the steep turn which has heretofore been so difficult to get over has been repaired and is now in good condition. From Hackettstown, through Great Meadows and Buttzville to Bridgeville, the surface is good, but from Bridgeville on the east side of the Delaware River, through Manunkachunk and Delaware to Portland is very rough, especially between Bridgeville and Delaware. It is also quite rough, and careful driving is required, between Portland and the Delaware Water Gap, as there have been some washouts and the trolley runs in the centre of a narrow road with many curves.

There are two roads to the Water Gap which lead to the bridge at Dingmans. One is via the Hudson County Boulevard and Newark Avenue, then over the Belleville Pike through Belleville, Montclair, Caldwell, Parsippany, Dover, Kenville, Netcong, and Andover; Newton to Branchville; then Layton Hill to the bridge at Dingmans. The Layton Hill road was built last year and is a great improvement. The above route is also the trunk line and the most direct connection between New York and Lake Hopatcong. It is hard surfaced and about 85 per cent. in good condition.

Another good route to the Water Gap via Dingmans is to cross the 130th Street or the Dyckman Street Ferry and run through Englewood and Teaneck to Hackensack. From Hackensack take Essex Street to Paterson, then follow the Hamburg Pike through Pompton, Newfoundland, and Stockholm to Franklin Furnace, then north through Hamburg to Sussex and back to Branchville, then through Layton to Dingmans.

The road from Franklin Furnace through Ogdensburg and Sparta to Lafayette is in bad condition, as is the road from Franklin Furnace through Monroe to Lafayette.

The Delaware Valley road from Milford through Bushkill and Marshall's Creek to Stroudsburg is in excellent condition. The road running from Delaware through Shawnee, connecting with the Bushkill road remains very rough. There are two ways to run from Stroudsburg to Mount Pocono; one via Bartonsville, Tannersville, and Swift Water, considered the better at the present time, and the other via Paradise Valley.

Construction is in progress between Morristown and Danville, and the road is entirely closed.

Pompton Turnpike, from Montclair to Pompton Lake, is in excellent condition, also the Valley Road between Montclair and Paterson.

The road along the canal from Boonton to Mountain view, which has been a popular cross connection between Paterson and Dover, has become badly worn, and is now very rough in many places.

AUTO TRADE NOTES

The United States Tire Company has in its records proof that a bullet fired into one of its nobby cord pneumatic truck tires at Camp McClellan, Anniston, Ala., failed to puncture it. The bullet embedded itself in the thread, but did not pierce the fabric, and remained there for several months before it was removed.

The All American Sales Corporation of 1,836 Broadway has been organized to cover the distribution in the Eastern territory of the Case motor car. Robert S. Otto is President and J. J. Johnstone, Jr., Secretary. Mr. Johnstone was sales manager of the former H. A. Sanders Company.

Eugene P. Herrman, President of the Herrman Motor Truck Company of New York, Eastern Stewart truck distributors, announces the appointment of the F. B. Hague Company of 22-24 Halsey Street, Newark, as Newark sales agents for Stewart trucks.

To prepare for its increasing business, the Franklin Automobile Company has started construction on a new $500,000 factory at Syracuse. Facilities will soon be provided for an annual output of 18,000 cars.

Dr. Stanley M. Rinehart of Pittsburgh has purchased a Winton Six as a gift for his wife, Mary Roberts Rinehart, novelist.

William J. Ryan, Vice President of the Pressman Tire and Rubber Company, announces that plans are being made to erect a six-story building in this city.

The appointment of R. C. Getsinger as sales manager of the Lincoln Motor Company is announced by Wilfred C. Leland, Vice President and general manager. Organized two years ago, the company is now preparing to put a new motor car on the market.

The Doble-Detroit Steam Motors Company and the Amalgamated Machinery Corporation of Chicago have joined forces, and the manufacture of Doble steam cars will be carried on in Chicago at the plant of the latter company.

The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company is using an airplane to enable the managers of the cotton plantations at Phoenix, Ariz., to inspect operations quickly.

The new Cole aero eight cars are finished either in blue or gray, with upholstery to match.

BUILD STRONG ROADS.

Need to Prepare Now for Motor Transportation Increase.

Nearly every State in the Union is making preparations for extensive highway improvements, and in many States new bond issues aggregating many millions of dollars have been authorized. Windsor T. White, Chairman of the Motor Truck Committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, says that the mistake of building them of too light a construction should be carefully avoided.

"We are not building our highways to look at, nor are we building them for horses and wagons," he says. "We are building them for highway motor transportation, for great lines of motor trucks, which will use them for transporting our commerce.

"Twenty years ago we did not need highways as we do today, for the demand was for ordinary dirt, or, at the very best, lightly constructed macadam, because they were called upon to carry one or two horses and a light vehicle. A heavy hard top is now required, and the high cost is only economy in dollars when commerce instead of pleasure uses them."

STUDY GERMAN TRUCKS.

Auto Engineers to Examine Forty-seven Vehicles Brought to America.

Representatives of the Society of Automotive Engineers, the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, and the Motor and Accessory Manufacturers Association, in conference with officers of the Motor Transport Corps of the American Army, have formulated plans for the research investigation of the forty-seven German motor trucks recently brought to this country by Lieut. Col. A. J. Slade under the terms of the armistice.

They were selected by Colonel Slade from the 1,250 turned over by Germany to the United States. They represent the best available samples of current German practice in truck construction. The Motor Transport Corps made preliminary plans for testing and examining them, inviting co-operation of the industry in the matter.

L. P. Kalb will have charge of the work. He will represent the three associations. He is Chairman of the Truck Standards Division of the Standards Committee of the Society of Automotive Engineers. During the war he was a Major in the Motor Transport Corps and took a leading part in the standardization of the army motor truck.

After a general study has been made of the trucks it has been suggested that some of the important parts be lent to manufacturers who may wish to make a closer study of the engine, carburetor, transmission, and magneto. It is possible that such an arrangement may be worked out with the understanding that a complete report of each study will be made available to the Motor Transport Corps and to the industry in general.

Studebaker

—the most talked-of car on Broadway

THE New Studebaker BIG-SIX is probably the most talked-of motor car in America today. And on Broadway, New York's famous automobile row, men praise the unrivaled beauty and mechanical excellence of this car. Scores of enthusiastic owners here in New York attest to its remarkable capabilities—speed, power, comfort and economical operation.

Its construction combines highly-perfected 60 horsepower motor; 126-inch wheelbase of remarkable solidity; hand-buffed genuine leather; silver-faced speedometer and jeweled 8-day clock; glove box in back of front seat; extension tonneau lamp. Cord tires and shock absorbers are standard equipment.

Studebaker has equipped the new Service and Repair Station, 219-23 West 77th Street, with every modern device for the rendering of prompt, efficient service to all Studebaker owners in the metropolitan district. And it is easy to get to—right in the heart of Manhattan.

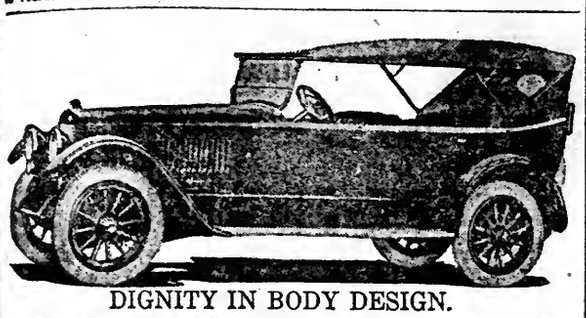
ARMY MOTOR TRAINING FOR EXPERT MECHANICS

Greatest Automobile School System Yet Attempted Now Under Way in Four Transport Corps Camps

Few persons have any clear idea of the extent of the work undertaken by the Motor Transport Corps of the War Department to demonstrate the practical use of motor vehicles for commercial purposes and to train men thoroughly in automotive matters so that they may be skilled operators and mechanics.

The practical success of the use of motor trucks by the army during the war stands out as one of the big achievements of America in the conflict. Another demonstration is now under way across the continent in the tour of more than seventy motor transport vehicles to preach the gospel of good roads and to recruit men for the educational advantages offered by the army in its development of motor use. Many of these men will ultimately be available for other branches of the Government preparing for extensive use of motor vehicles, as the Post Office Department, the Highway, and the Reclamation Bureaus.



DIGNITY IN BODY DESIGN.

The new Winton six-cylinder touring car known as the Bevel-Edge Special. Wheelbase 138 inches.

For this school training four great camps have been admirably fitted up and several thousand men have already enlisted for the courses. They are: Camp Jesup, near Atlanta; Camp Normoyle, in South San Antonio, Texas, near the Kelly Aviation Field; Camp Boyd, at El Paso, Texas, and Camp Holabird, in Baltimore.

"No educational or manufacturing institution in the world," says General C. B. Drake, head of the Motor Transport Corps, "can possibly compete in any sense with the equipment now in possession of the Motor Transport Corps as a plant for teaching automotive mechanics. The repair shops stand alone as the best of their kind in existence anywhere. They were designed and equipped not for the manufacture of a new article, but for the reconstruction of vehicles. Their equipment was designed in the light of the experience obtained by army officers in the maintenance of equipment on the Mexican border, and with the aid of the most competent automotive engineers and production men that the army could find.

"The buildings are permanent structures of cement, steel, and glass, covering about five acres each. The tool equipment is the finest and most accurate that money will buy. It is duplicated only by the largest automobile manufacturers. Maintenance of the large number of vehicles in use in the army, and the probability of being required to care for the equipment of all other Government departments using motor vehicles, means that these shops will be running full time constantly, and will, therefore, afford the best possible place for practice in the art of automobile upkeep."

General Drake explains that the establishment of these schools since the close of the war was absolutely essential to obtain the proper number of automobile operators and drivers for the future needs of the Government. He found that men skilled in automotive vehicle operation and repair do not exist in anything like adequate numbers for the requirements of civil life. They are not being created at present either rapidly enough or well enough to at all meet present industrial needs. Skillful and competent automotive mechanics command wages that render them unattainable to the army under peace conditions. The army had no option in the matter and it entered the field of vocational training because there was no other way.

"Because of this dearth of good automotive mechanics," adds General Drake, "the public has grown to adopt a most wasteful and injurious habit of using automotive vehicles as long as they will function and then replace them, rather than maintaining them upon sound mechanical lines and thus securing an indefinite measure of profitable operation."

For the men who enlist in the Motor Corps for the school work a thorough course of instruction, covering five different grades, has been arranged. First will be that of the soldier—a four weeks' course. Then will come that of the military chauffeur, eight weeks, in which emergency repairs will be taught and drills on the rules of the road under most trying conditions, in city and country, finishing with two weeks or more of driving in convoy formation by day and night. Following this will come that of the auto mechanic, the aim of which is to produce men who will be able to overhaul and repair any standard type of truck or passenger vehicle. Next will be that of the inspector and foreman, sixteen weeks, designed to train men to master workmen in automotive matters. The last and highest will be that of the automotive engineer, open only to those who have successfully completed the preceding courses. This will cover thirty-six weeks, and includes a course of university instruction in one of the best technological schools. It is not expected that all men enlisting in the Motor Corps will take every course. They will be assigned to the higher grades according to their ability, but the courses they do complete will make them efficient automobile workers in those particular branches.

General Drake states that for superior repair men, who enter the army with a good deal of experience as automobile mechanics, and who are able to rapidly assimilate the work given in the first sixteen weeks' course, and who are therefore fit for assignment to the course for inspectors and shop foremen, the army will have a place, and every effort will be made to retain them as instructors in its schools. For those who, upon completion of the inspectors and shop foremen course, desire to leave the service, positions as garage superintendents, service managers, motor vehicle supervisors for fire departments and municipal equipment, and positions as inspectors of motor vehicles in civil branches of the Government will be open.

Viewed from this latter aspect alone the educational facilities offered by the Motor Transport Corps are more comprehensive than anything hitherto planned to develop a really efficient class of automotive mechanics.

AVIATION PROGRESS ABROAD

Foreign Countries Show Live Interest in Commercial Flying.

The Manufacturers' Aircraft Association has been collecting data regarding the peacetime development of the airplane, commercially and otherwise, in foreign countries. It points out the fact that in every country heard from governmental aid is being extended to stimulate the industry.

In Great Britain, for instance, the association's report says Governmental war contracts were not all canceled nor was the size of the air service reduced for the coming year. Civilian fliers have been encouraged to buy army planes at prices set moderately low.

Even Switzerland is beginning to recognize the peacetime possibilities of the airplane and has started postal routes. Italy has included nearly $25,000,000 in her annual budget for aircraft purposes, while Holland is holding an aviation exposition to interest the public. Advices from Germany indicate that the new Government is inclined to foster aviation in line with other countries.

In the Far East Japan is taking steps to keep alive the airplane industry and plans are being made to maintain an adequate air service during peace times.

Sell Canadian Airplane Parts Here.

The Aircraft Materials and Equipment Corporation has completed arrangements to become distributers in the United States of spare parts for Canadian training planes formerly used by the Royal Air Force in Canada, and of which several hundreds have been sold for commercial purposes.

A warehouse has been leased at 1,409 Sedgwick Avenue, where a complete stock of parts will be kept on hand. A comprehensive parts catalogue has been published, in which is listed every part of the Canadian training plane and engine.

M. W. Hanks, President of the Aircraft Materials and Equipment Corporation, was in Washington during the war in charge of aircraft specifications, Bureau of Construction and Repair, Navy Department.

LONDON FLYING CLUB.

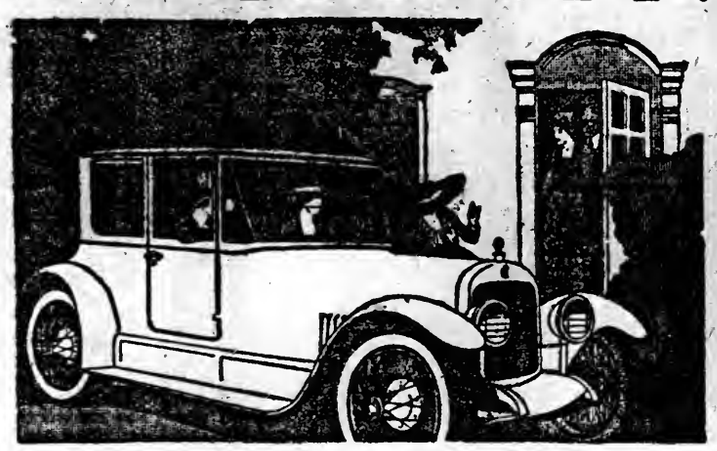
Has Magnificent Facilities at Hendon—Lord Lonsdale Is President.

The London Flying Club at Hendon starts off auspiciously with a notable array of officials and a building with a hall large enough to accommodate 2,000 persons and fifty sleeping rooms. There is an aerodrome of eighty acres where it is intended to maintain airplanes for the use of members, either for solo flying or as passengers in parties. A flying school for the teaching of aeronautics will be maintained.

The President is Lord Lonsdale, and the Vice Presidents include Lord Willoughby de Broke, the Duke of Rutland, the Marquis of Cholmondeley, Viscount Curzon, Sir Arthur du Cros, Lord D'Abernon, Lieut. Gen. Sir David Henderson, Lieut. Col. Cecil Grenfell, Major Gen. Sir John Seely, Admiral Sir Edward Seymour, and Lord Ribblesdale.

The Ritz Hotel is the London headquarters, and between the two a service of cars for the benefit of members will be maintained. The annual dues are 10 guineas, but present or retired officers of the Royal Air Force have membership privileges for 5 guineas.

JORDAN



Favored Among Women

The Jordan Brougham was happily conceived and first introduced by Jordan in anticipation of the pronounced demand for just this type of car which now seems insatiable.

It is the favored car among women. The light all-aluminum body is hammock swung between the axles. The chassis is perfectly balanced.

The driving position has been studied and steering made easy. The car will turn in almost any road—sharply contrasting with the old-fashioned bulky car of excessive length and weight.

Five people sit comfortably in full width rear seat and two permanent individual seats. Upholstery in fashionable worsteds. Marshall cushion springs. Paneling and mouldings in Circassian walnut marquetry.

Sloping, weather-proof windshield. Improved window lifts. Yale door locks. Dome lights. Individual reading lamps. New crown fenders. Water tight rear compartment large enough for tools and two suit cases.

Optional colors, Liberty Blue and Brewster Green.

Swinehart Tires

This Man Knows Why They Wear -and Wear -and Wear

MOST DEALERS are familiar with the care, time, materials and workmanship that go into the making of Swinehart Tires. And, after all, these are the essentials—the principal ones—necessary in making good tires.

We Make Them So

There is such a thing as a good tire.

One that is made to stand up and go through with the worst that comes.

And it's the only kind worth having; the kind you can believe in.

Most men in the tire business think Swinehart Tires are that kind.

At any rate, we try to make them so.

One thing we DO know:

It's the tire without a single Government rejection.

Swinehart Tires are made in both Fabric and Cord—both give more guaranteed mileage for your money than you ever would expect or ever have a right to expect.

Ideal Cellular Truck Tires

The angle, depth and width of the cells or holes in this remarkable tire are scientifically correct. This patented construction makes this tire semi-pneumatic and eliminates the dangers due to blowouts and punctures, so common in pneumatic truck tires. No spare tire is necessary, because the tire will often outwear the truck. This cellular feature also makes the tire anti-skid and non-heating. The many advantages are obvious.

Let your next tires be Swinehart—and see that the truck or car you buy is equipped with them.

Dealers: There may be an opening for a dealer in your territory. Better inquire now.

SCHOONMAKER & JACOD

The Missing Link

"ALL day at the office for me. All day hard at work at home for the wife. Of course we were happy, but we missed something, and we didn't know what. Then we bought this car of Schoonmaker & Jacod. Life opened up for us; we began to realize that we had been miles apart.

"This is a Schoonmaker & Jacod car—they buy only better types of cars—then their Service Engineers overhaul them and put them in A-1 condition. Now we are out in the open; now we are just beginning to learn how other people live and enjoy life. Frankly, this car is a real happiness-builder."

APARTMENTS HARD TO FIND

Shortage Increasing, with Scant Prospect of Boom in Building—The Scarcity of Kitchens

THE unanimous conclusion reached by people engaged in the pleasant game of apartment hunting is that there is nothing which suits them. They may get something that will do, but not exactly what they want.

In the past year there has been almost no building construction in New York. There has been some renovating and alteration of private or semi-private houses, but this does not affect the plight of the family that needs from four to seven rooms. Apartment houses containing flats of this size are full, and neither prayers nor threats can jimmy the tenants out of them.

Many of the brownstone houses in the better side streets are being fixed over into one, two, and three room suites, sometimes with kitchenettes, more often without. However, these mean little to anybody but the unattached male or female who can afford them. Most of them rent for from $1,000 a year up. They are the only paying proposition to the builder. To the family in search of a place where it can live and eat, they are unsatisfactory. The woman who wants a home cannot cook in a kitchenette, artists' and writers' opinions notwithstanding. She wants a kitchen. But the owners of these altered houses sniff at the idea of kitchens—for several reasons.

First of all, it costs too much to put in a kitchen. The kitchenette is much cheaper. Second, kitchens take up too much space, and need at least one window. A kitchenette can be squeezed into any dark corner. Third, the people who are having these old brownstones altered admit quite frankly that they want no family cooking on the premises. And fourth, these houses are not fireproof buildings. According to the old tenement house law, it was a misdemeanor to build a kitchenette in a two-room, non-fireproof apartment. The new law has somewhat modified that drastic measure. To each non-fireproof house, containing two-room suites, are now allowed two kitchenettes.

The statistics of the population and building in New York City for the last six years are significant. The normal increase in population for 1914 to 1916, inclusive, was an average annual growth of 107,000. In order to care for this increase, 171 apartment houses were built, on an average, each year. In 1917 this number had decreased to 160. In 1918 there were only 130 apartment houses put up. In the first three months of this year plans were filed for 82 apartment houses. Today the number has risen to 278.

The population in the last few years has increased at more than an average rate, owing to war work. It is no exaggeration to say that the rise has been at the rate of 150,000 to 200,000 in each of the last two years, while building has been almost at a standstill. The acuteness of the housing situation may also be realized from statistics of the Tenement House Department. There are in New York City 103,000 tenements. In 1916 the percentage of vacancies was 5.6 per cent.; in 1917, 3.66 per cent.; in 1918, 2.16 per cent. The investigation of these vacancies by the Housing Committee showed that practically all of them were in houses where conditions were unlivable.

Increasing rents are forcing families in all parts of the city into smaller quarters and into apartments that they would have considered quite unsatisfactory a year or so ago. The increases in rents have ranged from 15 to 25 per cent.

In view of the apartment shortage, the Reconstruction Commission of the State of New York made a survey of the housing conditions in the most congested sections of the city. It was ascertained that practically no vacancies existed in habitable houses. A result of this shortage of living quarters has been a growing laxity on the part of the landlords in caring for the poorer type of houses. In many cases there are no janitors, and the stairs are never cleaned except by the tenants themselves.

A few years ago, on account of the oversupply of apartments, the tenants had a measure of control over the situation. Today the landlord is on top. Rents are raised to practically any extent that he desires, while apartments are allowed to fall into bad condition. In a survey made of one of the blocks in the 60s, on the east side, were found only three vacancies in 863 apartments, despite the fact that the apartments were in poor repair and rents had been increased. The tenements were occupied by people who were afraid to complain about conditions for fear that their rents would be raised or that they would be dispossessed. In a nearby block the apartments were found in a wretched condition, ill-kept, many with but little light and with leaking roofs; yet every apartment was full and the tenants afraid they would be put out. One tenant in this house told the investigator that she had worn her shoes out looking for another place, but had found only "ratholes." Many of the old-law tenement houses, for years considered uninhabitable by even the very lowest dregs of society, are occupied today, although they reek with rodents and vermin.

It has been figured out by taking the statistics of the building and population rates for the last three years that, unless there is an abnormal amount of building within the next six months, the shortage next January will mount up to more than 30,000 apartments. The present plans for building 278 houses will relieve the situation for about 4,000 families. Those houses planned in Manhattan are mostly elevator apartments, intended for families that can afford to pay high prices. The rents probably will range from $1,200 up. The buildings under construction in the other boroughs are all "walkups," and seem to have been planned to meet the demand of families of average means.

The housing situation in the upper part of the State seems to be as bad as in New York City. Headquarters have been opened in Buffalo to study the problem. The overcrowding is in the two and three-family houses, where the congestion is chiefly apparent in the increased number of boarders found in each house. The investigators have found instances where the crowded conditions are doing much to breed ill-health. In speaking of the Buffalo inquiry, John Alan Hamilton, who is at the head of the work in the northern section of the State, said a few days ago:

"Unless building is resumed immediately, our industries, and therefore our prosperity, will suffer seriously, because it will be impossible to find shelter for the workers whom we need, and they will go to other places. The returning soldiers present a problem—during the absence of the men a number of families doubled up. Now that the men are coming back, these families find that the houses which they previously occupied were either unavailable or too high in price to go back to. Even in the smallest communities, our investigations show that it is absolutely essential that several types of houses be begun at once. We need one, two and three-family houses, detached houses, multiple houses or apartments. In Buffalo we need especially the detached house or apartment which will rent for from $25 to $40."

A report from Chicago indicates that the housing situation there is equally serious. Rentals of apartments have gone up 10 to 30 per cent. on the new leases going into effect in October. There have been instances where these increases have reached 100 per cent.

it no longer possible for a station "nachalnick," whose salary was 300 rubles a month, ($50 at the then prevailing rate of exchange,) to run it up with "vsiatka," as was reported to have happened at some of the larger stations, to 15,000, 20,000, and even 30,000 rubles a month.

It was the perfectly good American theory that the thing to be done with the Trans-Siberian Railroad was to clean up the system of management by corruption and bribery and substitute for it a system of management by honest and well-paid officials. Indeed, in the mass of under-employes, conductors, engineers, switchmen, shopworkers, &c., the prospects of better wages and better working conditions which they identified with American management caused them for a time to welcome our supervision of the railroad. It so happened, however, that all changes could not be made with a wave of the wand.

Sabotage on Railroad.

American management could strike out bribery as soon as it appeared, but it could not simultaneously so influence the economic relationships of industry to industry as to cause a complete transformation in the wage scale of the railroad. While bribery stopped wherever the Americans could stop it, there appeared in its place no corresponding increase in salaries, and the result was bitterness and resentment. In all ranks of employes it led to a constant inclination to sabotage, to interfere in underhand and secret ways with the successful operation of the railroad under American supervision.

Out of the population emanated another army of opposition, that part of the population which is frankly Bolshevist or anti-Kolchak and which objects to any assistance being given to the existing Government at Omsk.

Looking upon the railroad only as a means by which the Allies are shipping munitions and supplies to the Kolchak forces, the Bolshevist elements support and participate in a system of sporadic warfare against the railroad, their acts of destruction being secretly connived at by dissatisfied railroad officials, and even by workmen on the road itself, who are propagandized by Bolshevist agitators into the belief that American railway operation in Siberia is merely an attempt on the part of "American capitalists to exploit Russian labor" and should therefore be stopped by any means available. That is the Bolshevist viewpoint of the situation that permeates the ignorant masses and makes them as a class hostile to our railroad administration in Siberia.

In the middle classes there may be a spark of sincere approval of our presence in the railroad administration, the commercial, business, and co-operative elements in that section of the population being eager for the benefits that they know must come from the reconstruction and reorganization of the Trans-Siberian Railroad by the Americans. Their approval, on the other hand, is so marked by a tendency to regard our work with the railroad as a cold-blooded piece of American economic expansion, as something by which we intend to benefit ourselves as much as the Russians, that it would take much imagination to find in their cynical attitude on the matter any flash of gratitude or thankfulness.

No matter how well intentioned our efforts have been, we seem, in other words, to have made as few friends and as many enemies with our economic policy as we have made with our military policy.

Antagonism on All Sides.

With our support of the Kolchak administration we alienated, of course, the Bolshevist sympathies in the masses. In the middle classes we antagonized the liberal bourgeoisie, which sees only reaction and monarchism in the Kolchak régime. While the bourgeoisie, especially the business and professional elements, would prefer even the temporary support of a military dictatorship to a relapse into Bolshevism, the politically active bourgeoisie regards even such temporary support as a measure that may permanently strengthen the forces of reaction. As such it becomes highly undesirable in their eyes. As has already been stated, with the danger of reaction definitely destroyed, they would rather take their chances with Bolshevism through out-and-out democratic contact than to be kept dancing indefinitely, as they are now forced to do, between the twin dangers of Bolshevism on the one side and reaction on the other.

Can one find any real friendship for our political policy in the bureaucratic and Government classes which support the Kolchak Government? Even here we meet cold shoulders and scowling countenances. Why? Because we have not gone far enough to suit them. They say we pretend to assist the Kolchak Government in the one breath and in the next breath withhold the official recognition that would really give our support the "punch" and political strength that the Kolchak Government feels it must have to exist as an international factor. Our willingness to go only part of the way with them involves, according to their point of view, as much repudiation as it does recognition. The result is just as much hostility to our political policy in that class as in any other class, though for entirely different reasons.

In view of these conditions, only one conclusion is possible. Intervention may be all wrong or all right, but without doubt our kind of intervention in Siberia—military, economic, and political—has won us more enmity than friendship in that part of the world.

Advance Advice About Accessories

"Accessories should never be accidental,"—they should be as carefully and as harmoniously chosen as the original frock itself. A very simple costume may be lifted into the class called the "exclusive" by an exquisite collar, a smart pair of boots, an ultra-chic handbag—etc., etc.

Has any one ever read an exact description of Cinderella's ball gown—yet who has not heard of her wonderful glass slippers?

And, whatever the rest of her array may have been, we have never been allowed to forget that Queen Elizabeth wore a "ruff" about her regal neck.

Nor is it possible for us to separate our picture of "great grandmamma" from her "reticule"—her hand-bag.

Beaded Bags From France

—Beaded Bags, the final touch of elegance in a smart costume.

Because they are hand-made it is rare to find two alike, or even bearing a slight resemblance to each other.

The colorings are as delightful as art and nature can make them—the French "sense" beauty as a butterfly senses the flowers. There is a bag that must have had its inspiration in one of those pure creamy white Cashmere shawls, with its daring border of red. Another has a haunting way of reminding one of a Persian rug in the sunshine. At least a dozen dozen beguiled one today in a dozen ways. There are wee ones for your change to tip the maid in the dressing-room at the dance. There are "hoop-skirt" ones with their delightful chiffon flounces beaded and fringed with beads to fall over the steadfast satin body. There are very large ones—completely joyful in line and color. Most of these are mounted on shell frames or antique silver, and still others have grown their lovely beads up over the frame itself—

And the prices?—Most interesting.

Beginning at $21.08, they offer variations up to $99.75.

(The odd numbers indicating that the war tax is included in the price.)

And have you seen the Metal Brocade Satin Bags? They are so very new and so unique that they are only found in the fashion-alert shops.

You should see the new full bag of gold brocaded satin mounted on a self-covered frame—with a fascinating little Chinese god of old ivory acting as a clasp and guardian of your wealth.

To the Wholesale Dress Buyer!

Fashion Fetes and Window Displays the Country over bring

Maison Haas Dresses to the Fore

PROGRESSIVE department stores throughout the width and breadth of the land are already featuring our dresses in their Window Displays and in their Fashion Fetes, realizing that public approval always finds its logical trend toward authentic Parisian models.

In fact, the ability to adopt Parisian style for America as quickly as Paris herself decrees fashion for France, has no more illustrious sample than the creative work which we are doing this season through our contact with the Parisian market.

As a result, not a single radically new idea has escaped, or can escape, our notice. Every dress we produce is literally a Parisian model in conception, yet absolutely American in execution.

To Secure One of the Magnificent Bohn Syphon Refrigerators Specially Made for the U.S. NAVY

Last August we were awarded by the U. S. Government a large contract for Refrigerators for battleships, armored cruisers, submarine chasers and other vessels of the first rate. The contract called for the very highest grade of construction ever put into Refrigerators by any manufacturer. These Refrigerators were shipped to the various Navy Yards.

When the Armistice was signed, most of the Refrigerators shipped to the Philadelphia Navy Yard could not be used because the vessels for which these Refrigerators were intended would not be built by the Government.

These Refrigerators were stored in the Philadelphia Navy Yard Buildings Nos. 400 and 401, and were shipped back to us. Those that are still left are now in the original crates, and are ready for immediate delivery or shipment, or can be held (on a small deposit) for Fall delivery. But the stock is almost exhausted.

These superb Refrigerators were made according to the rigid specifications of the Government, worked out in all details by the engineers of the U. S. Navy, and approved by the highest authorities. They have 4 doors, 5 shelves, and 2 bottom compartments. The size is $37\frac{1}{2}$ inches wide, $20\frac{3}{4}$ inches deep, and 60 inches high, somewhat larger than the average run of Refrigerators. Ice capacity about 100 lbs.

These Refrigerators have exteriors of beautiful light sky-blue genuine fused-steel porcelain. The trim and fittings are handsome solid brass nickel-plated, with heavy solid brass nickel-plated sanitary legs equipped with brass sockets, with 6 inch clearance from the floor for easy cleaning.

The lining is genuine pure white fused-steel porcelain, single piece and with round corners. Each process in the manufacture of these Refrigerators was rigidly inspected by Government engineers and approved during the manufacture.

Each Refrigerator is fitted with 2 Yale & Towne specially made nickel-plated padlocks, bearing the name "U. S. N."

It is obvious that for sea service they must be absolutely proof against dampness.

The Bohn Syphon Refrigerator is the standard of the world. All railroads use the Bohn Syphon System for their refrigerator cars, and every dining car in the land (the severest possible test of a Refrigerator) has a Bohn Syphon.

The actual market value of these Refrigerators is $250.00. We are offering them during this special sale at $156.00.

We have on exhibition here probably the largest and finest display of high-class Refrigerators in the country. You will find here Bohn Refrigerators in great variety, from $19.00 up, including the Bohn All-Metal "Ideal," same as used by the U. S. Government in Panama. All are now marked at very low prices.

BOHN SYPHON REFRIGERATOR

During this Special Sale we have marked All Models at Radical Reductions

On a reasonable deposit we will hold any Refrigerator, including these U. S. Navy Refrigerators, for early Fall delivery.

La-May Face Powder Is Harmless to the Most Delicate Skin

A specialist has at last perfected a pure face powder that positively will not cause enlarged pores, blackheads and irritations. In fact, while it is considered the best face powder, it is also a remedy for complexion troubles. It is guaranteed pure and harmless to the most delicate baby skin. It beautifies wonderfully because it helps to clear and lighten the skin and protect the complexion from blemishes. This new kind of face powder is made largely of an ingredient that skin specialists use in the treatment of the complexion. And it really stays on better than any other face powder. Of course, saying this, every one knows we mean the famous La-may Powder (French, Poudre L'Amé). This is the powder that does not contain starchy rice powder or dangerous white lead to make it adhere. White lead is a deadly poison and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that makes enlarged pores, blackheads and rice powder irritations. Because La-may is so pure and because it stays on so well it is now used by over a million American women. All dealers carry the large box, and many dealers also carry the small trial size. Be sure to try La-may. Then you will really know a perfect face powder. You will be sorry if you take a substitute. When you use this harmless powder and see how beautifully it improves your complexion, you will understand why La-may so quickly became the most popular beauty powder sold in America. Save this notice.

Twice the life for your silk stockings

After every wearing, dip them in these delicate suds

SILK stockings should never be left unlaundered after a single wearing, as perspiration attacks the fibre and weakens it. Freshen them, the moment they get soiled, in pure Lux suds!

Lux comes in delicate white flakes that dissolve instantly in hot water. You simply toss a tablespoonful into hot water and stir up a rich lather. Then add cold water until the suds are lukewarm—and in your stockings go!

Don't let another pair of your silk stockings be ruined by perspiration. Get Lux today from your grocer, druggist or department store. —Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

A few don'ts for silk stockings

Never wring silk stockings. Wringing injures the fibre. Just squeeze the water out gently.

Always use a warm iron, never a hot one. Heat injures silk fibre and yellows white and delicate colors.

Spread clocked stockings on a towel, and roll immediately to dry. Iron while still damp. This will keep the clocks from running.

THERE IS NOTHING FOR FINE FABRICS LIKE LUX: YOU CAN TRUST ANYTHING TO LUX THAT PURE WATER ALONE WON'T INJURE.

Why My Memory Rarely Fails Me and how the method of improving memory may be learned in a single evening

By DAVID M. ROTH

NOTE: When I asked Mr. Roth to tell in his own words, for author-able publication, the remarkable story of the development of his system for the cure of bad memories, I found him reluctant to talk about himself in cold print. When I reminded him that he could do no finer service than to share his story with others—just as he is sharing his method for obtaining a better memory with more than a quarter of a million others who are studying his famous Memory Course—he cordially agreed to my proposal. And here is his story.—President Independent Corporation.

FIFTY members of the Rotary Club were seated in the banquet hall of the Hotel McAlpin in New York. I was introduced to each member in turn, and each gave me his telephone number and told me his occupation. An hour later, after they had changed seats while my back was turned to them, I called each man by name, gave his telephone number and named his occupation, without a single error.

The following evening, in the office of a large business institution, I asked the president of the concern to write down fifty words, numbers and names, and to number each item. An hour later I called out each item and gave the number opposite which it had been written.

At another time I glanced at the license numbers of a hundred and five automobiles which passed. These numbers were written down by witnesses, in the order in which the cars passed. Later, I called each number correctly and gave the order in which the numbers went by.

From Seattle to New York I have appeared before salesmen's meetings, conventions, and Rotary Clubs giving demonstrations of my memory. I have met over 10,000 people in my travels. Yet I am quite sure I can call most of these men and women by name when I meet them, ask many of them how the lumber business is or the shoe business or whatever business they were in when I was first introduced to them.

People wonder at these memory feats. Hundreds have asked me how I can store so many facts, figures, and faces in my mind, and recall them at will. And they are even more mystified when I explain that my memory used to be so poor I would forget a man's name twenty seconds after I met him. In fact, that was what led me to investigate and study the cause of poor memory and the remedy. For years I read books on Psychology, mental culture, memory and other subjects. All of these books were good, but none of them were definite, or easy enough. So I labored until I found out what it was that enabled me to remember some things while I forgot others. Finally I worked out a system that made my memory almost infallible.

I explained my system to a number of friends and they could hardly believe it possible. But some of them tried my method and invariably they told me they had improved their memory power in a week. They got the method the first evening and then developed it as far as they cared to go.

The principles which I had formulated in improving my own memory were so simple and so easy to apply that I decided to give my method to the world.

At first I taught my memory system in person. My classes, in Rotary Clubs, banks, department stores, railway offices, manufacturing plants and every kind of business institution grew amazingly in size and number. Memory teaching became my sole profession, and a wonderful experience it has been all the way from Seattle to New York City.

I soon realized that I could never hope to serve more than a small fraction of those who needed my memory system and were eager to take it up unless I put it into a home-study course which people could acquire without personal instruction.

The Independent Corporation, whose President, Mr. Karl V. S. Howland, had become interested in my work as a member of my Rotary Club class in New York, saw the large possibilities of my Course as an element in their broad program for personal efficiency and self-improvement.

So it was my pleasure to join forces with this great publishing house, and the Roth Memory Course, in seven simple lessons, was offered to the public at a price of $5 (correspondence courses having been sold hitherto at anywhere from $20 to $100.)

No money in advance was to be asked, the idea being that the Course must sell itself purely on its merits.

As you have doubtless observed, an extensive advertising campaign was launched by my publishers with full page announcements in all the leading periodicals of the country and in many leading newspapers.

This campaign has continued without a let-up and with ever growing momentum.

From the very start this advertising became successful. The idea spread. Orders came in from everywhere. Edition after edition of the lessons were printed and still thousands of orders could not be filled.

The promise was made that the Course would improve any man's or woman's memory in one evening. And it did! Letters of praise began to pour in almost as fast as the lessons were shipped—and have kept up ever since.

DAVID M. ROTH

For example, Major E. B. Craft, Assistant Chief Engineer of the Western Electric Company, New York, wrote:

> "Last evening was the first opportunity I had to study the Course, and in one sitting I succeeded in learning the list of 100 words forward and backward, and to say that I am delighted with the method is putting it very mildly. I feel already that I am more than repaid in the real value and enjoyment that I have got out of the first lesson."

Read this letter from Terence J. McManus, of the firm of Olcott, Bonynge, McManus & Ernst, Attorneys and Counsellors at Law, 170 Broadway, and one of the most famous trial lawyers in New York.

> "May I take occasion to state that I regard your service in giving this system to the world as a public benefaction? The wonderful simplicity of the method, and the ease with which its principles may be acquired, especially appeal to me. I may add that I already had occasion to test the effectiveness of the first two lessons in the preparation for trial of an important action in which I am about to engage."

Mr. McManus didn't put it a bit too strong.

And here is just a quotation from H. O. (Multigraph) Smith, Division Manager of the Multigraph Sales Co. Ltd., in Montreal:

> "Here is the whole thing in a nutshell: Mr. Roth has a most remarkable Memory Course. It is simple, and easy as falling off a log. Yet with one hour a day of practice anyone—I don't care who he is—can improve his Memory in a week and have a good memory in six months."

Then there is the amazing experience of Victor Jones, who increased his business $100,000 in six months. And there are hundreds and thousands of others who have studied the Course and who have secured greater benefit from it than they dreamed possible.

Perhaps the main reason why my method is so successful is because it is so ridiculously simple. You get the method of improving the Memory in one evening—in the very first lesson. Then you may develop your memory to any point you desire through the other six lessons. There are only seven lessons in all. Yet the method is so thorough that your memory may be trained to become your obedient slave. And instead of being hard work, it is as fascinating as a game to those interested. I have received letters from people who say the whole family gathers round the table for each lesson!

Men and women from coast to coast have thanked me for having made it so easy for them to acquire a good memory. As one man said:

> "Memory and good judgment go hand in hand. Our judgment is simply the conclusions we draw from our experience, and our experience is only the sum total of what we remember. I now store away in my mind every valuable fact that relates to my business, whether it is something I hear or read, and when the proper time comes I recall all the facts I need. Before I studied the Roth Course it took me three times as long to gain experience simply because I forgot so many facts."

And how true that is! We say of elderly men that their judgment is "ripe." The reason it is ripe is because they have accumulated greater experience. But if we remember all the important facts we can have a ripened judgment 15 or 20 or 30 years sooner!

Thousands of sales have been lost because the salesman forgot some selling point that would have closed the order. Many men when they are called upon to speak fail to put over their message or to make a good impression because they are unable to remember just what they wanted to say.

Many decisions involving thousands of dollars have been made unwisely because the man responsible didn't remember all the facts bearing on the situation, and thus used poor judgment. In fact, there is not a day but that the average business man forgets to do from one to a dozen things that would have increased his profits. There are no greater words in the English language descriptive of business inefficiency than the two little words, "I forgot."

My pupils are gracious enough to say that nothing will help make that fatal phrase obsolete so quickly as the memory system it has been my good fortune to evolve.

Mr. Roth has told his story. It now remains for you to turn it into dividends. Such an ambition will be helped, we are sure, if you will spend the fraction of time it requires to send for the complete Course on absolute approval.

After a few hours spent with the Roth Memory Course the fear as well as the tragedy of forgetting may be greatly eliminated. You should obtain a fascinating new sense of confidence and power.

Not only that, but you will have a sense of freedom that you never felt before. You may be freed of the memorandum pad, the notebook, and other artificial helps to which most of us are slaves.

So confident is the Independent Corporation, the publishers of the Roth Memory Course, that once you have an opportunity to see in your own home how easy it is to improve your memory power that they are willing to send the Course on free examination.

Don't send any money. Merely mail the coupon or write a letter and the complete Course will be sent, all charges prepaid, at once. If you are not entirely satisfied, send it back any time within five days after you receive it and you will owe nothing.

On the other hand, if you are as pleased as are the thousands of other men and women who have used the Course, send only $5 in full payment. You take no risk and have everything to gain, so mail the coupon now.

"DEVIL DOGS"

Second Division Won Its Fame in France by Hard Fighting and Limitless Endurance

The 2d Division, which shares with the 1st Division the honor of having seen most fighting and suffered most casualties in the American battlelines, began to arrive in New York Harbor a week ago. After that, many transports brought in units of the "Devil Dogs." So widespread was the demand for a public reception that the War Department arranged for a parade through the city. A history of the 2d, written by Major Gen. A. W. Greely, retired, was published in The Sunday Times on June 15. Below, one of its officers records a few incidents in the course of its victorious advance toward the Rhine.

Major Gen. James G. Harbord

By CAPTAIN ARTHUR E. HARTZELL

Formerly First Lieutenant in the 23d Infantry.

WHEN our grandchildren have long beards—if beards be still in vogue—they will still be arguing, no doubt, about which was the best American division in the great war. It is an argument that can never be settled, because there are too many interested parties to it. But military experts, both here and in Europe, are inclined to pick out the 1st and 2d Divisions as sharing that honor. The 2d certainly saw as much fighting as any other, if not more, and it always played a picturesque rôle wherever it was engaged.

The 1st Division was really the pet of Headquarters, while the 2d had to win its way to favor by hard fighting. The 1st was the first in France, the first to enter the fighting line, and the only division to complete the full course of training outlined for all American units. The 2d was a hybrid organization, its infantry made up half of marines and half of regular infantry, and therefore it always had the bitterest internal rivalry of any division in France.

Both the 1st and 2d were used as training schools for the higher officers of the army. In the 2d the first active commander, Major Gen. Omar Bundy, who is as picturesque as his name, was promoted to command a corps. He was succeeded by Major Gen. James G. Harbord, who previously had had the Marine Brigade. Harbord then became commander in chief of the Services of Supply, the most important job in France with the exception of General Pershing's, and later Chief of Staff under Pershing. The other original brigade commander, General Lewis, was graduated to the command of the 30th Division, which made a great record along with New York's own 27th under British command. Preston Brown, who was Chief of Staff of the division during the hot fighting near Château-Thierry, later commanded the 3d Division and then went to Treves to direct the affairs of the advanced G. H. Q. Paul B. Malone, the writing and fighting Colonel of the 23d Infantry, was made a Brigadier General in the 5th Division, and after the armistice took command of the 1st Replacement Dépôt at St. Aignan, through which all unattached soldiers passed on their way home, and which for this reason became known throughout the army as Saint Agony. These are a few of the big men of the old 2d who achieved more important jobs.

The present commander of the 2d is Major Gen. J. A. Lejeune, a Marine Corps General. His appointment to this position is a tribute to the excellent work of the marines. It was the intention of Headquarters at one time division made up entirely, as far as infantry was concerned, of marines. There were four regiments of these troops in France, the 5th, 6th, 11th, and 13th, but only the first two saw fighting. The other regiments were used at guard duty and other unheroic tasks in the S. O. S. But for their size, two regiments of marines to 118 regiments of other infantry, the men who wear the globe and anchor made considerable talk.

The marines got a good start on the road to fame by their exploits at Belleau Wood; in fact, they made such a good record there that all military maps of this region now call the wood Marines' Wood. All of this fame, in which the rival brigade, composed of the 9th and 23d, had just as heroic a part to play, was due to a slip on the part of the censor. He was instructed not to allow newspaper correspondents to mention the number of regiments or divisions at a time when the enemy was straining every effort to identify our troops and learn just how many we had in France. The censor's rules said very plainly that the generic term infantry, cavalry, or artillery could be mentioned. He therefore considered marine a general term. The result was immense, from the marines' point of view. They became the heroes of the army, and for a long time even Americans in France would not believe that there was anything but marines in the army.

The rivalry between the marine brigade and the infantry brigade grew very tense because of this incident, so tense, in fact, that it threatened for a time to disrupt the organization of the division. One old army regular, when he heard of the publication at home of a book entitled "By the Grace of God and a Few Marines," made the following sarcastic comment:

"We knew we was good, but we're much obliged to the General for deifying us."

By us he meant his regiment, the 9th, and the 23d.

In the exciting days of the fighting around Château-Thierry the 2d Division had its headquarters in a little schoolhouse in the village of Montreuil-aux-Lions, on the main road from Paris to Metz and about ten miles from Château-Thierry itself. The schoolhouse was a beehive of industry, messengers coming and going at all hours of the day. The schoolhouse yard was filled with automobiles and as the headquarters was close to the front and in plain view it was not surprising that the boche soon began to shell it. He made life so uncomfortable for the 2d's officers that they finally had to move into a woods near by.

When things were about their hottest two correspondents sauntered into the office of Colonel Preston Brown, then Chief of Staff, to find out what was going on.

"What's doing, Colonel?" they asked, leaning up against his desk in a most unmilitary manner.

"Huh," he snapped, "go and ask Hindenburg what's doing, he knows more about it than I do. Get out of here!"

Colonel Brown, who has come up from the ranks, is regarded as one of the cleverest officers in the army. He is also noted for his temper and his picturesque way of expressing his ideas.

On another occasion Colonel Brown, who was standing at a window, saw a Sergeant of M. P.'s bringing back two men who had been picked up behind the lines as A. W. O. L.'s, or absent without leave.

"What yuh got there, a couple of A. W. O. L.'s?" bellowed Colonel Brown.

The Sergeant came to attention and replied in the affirmative.

"Then take 'em out and shoot 'em," shouted the Colonel, getting more violent every minute. "This is no time for A. W. O. L.'s."

The Sergeant never for a moment lost his composure. "Will you give me an order to shoot them?" he asked quietly.

The Colonel was somewhat taken aback. "No, damn it," he shouted, "but shoot 'em anyway."

After its remarkable performance in the neighborhood of Château-Thierry the 2d, which for the first time had been engaged in a major operation, was rated as a "storm division," that is, a division that could be put into the line at any important point and depended upon to break through. These troops lived up to their reputation, for they broke through south of Soissons, at St. Mihiel, in Champagne and in the Meuse-Argonne area. In every case they were the point of the wedge, and when they drove forward nothing seemed to be able to stop them.

In Champagne the 2d was ordered to break through the formidable second line positions which had held up the French attack. They broke through with such speed that they captured the fortified height of Blanc Mont before the Germans could recover from their surprise. There was an important observatory on the top of this hill. Just before the 2d's attack the German observer had been notified that his own troops were to make a counterattack and that he was to keep his command informed as to its progress. The counterattack never developed, but the observer did not know it, so when he saw a huge mass of khaki swarming up toward his position he gleefully wrote out the following message:

"Counterattack great success. Huge swarms of prisoners being brought in."

The message was never sent because the surprised observer was soon a prisoner in American hands.

In the Meuse-Argonne battle the Second Division has to its credit one of the most remarkable manoeuvres any fighting troops ever attempted, savoring of our engagements in the Philippines or some of the daring raids in the civil war.

The final attack in the battle began on Nov. 1. Twenty-four hours later the Germans were thrown into such confusion that the roads behind their lines were terribly congested and their troops were hopelessly muddled up. Taking advantage of this situation, General Lejeune determined upon a manoeuvre which at any other time in the war would have been suicide. The Marine brigade, together with the 23d Infantry, had borne the brunt of the fighting during the day of Nov. 3. That night a battalion of the 9th Infantry with a detachment of the 15th Field Artillery, formed in column on the one road leading north through the enemy lines. With only the usual protective measures on the march such as advance guard and flank patrols, these troops marched straight into enemy country for a distance of nearly four miles. They picked up German machine gunners asleep at their guns along the road and captured surprised work details who were astounded to find the Americans so close to them.

At one point these troops came across some officers sitting around a table in an abandoned farmhouse, never for a moment suspecting that they were not perfectly safe. By dawn the next morning this bold raiding party had established a strong defensive position from which they soon threw the enemy into a panic. The next night they repeated the performance so that the boche was soon hurriedly scurrying over the Meuse.

The 2d Division was the first American division to reach the Rhine, advancing through the northern and geographically the most difficult sector of the territory assigned to American troops. After the early days of December the troops of the division held the northern part of the bridgehead on the the eastern bank of the river.

To the 17th Field Artillery, one of the three artillery regiments of the 2d, fell the honor of occupying the Fort of Ehrenbreitstein, which dominates the City of Coblenz and the mouth of the Moselle River. The regiment had not been established there long before its peppery Colonel, E. Warner McCabe, had an immense American flag floating from the tower of the fort, which could be seen for miles up and down the Rhine. Over the entrance to the fort he had painted in huge letters: 17th U. S. Field Artillery. He was indeed lord over all he surveyed, for his guns commanded the City of Coblenz, and much of the surrounding country.

Ehrenbreitstein became the show place for all visitors to the American area. Generals, wandering Congressmen and doughboys climbed its steep approach to gaze at the scenery, admire the efficiency of the regiment on parade and listen to Colonel McCabe's story of how he had the river put in below the cliffs for the special benefit of visitors.

Because, probably, of the fact that the regiment was made up of a great many men who would soon go back into civilian life and also because of his general bent for efficiency, Colonel McCabe started a motor school to teach all comers how to handle anything driven by gasoline. This regimental school soon began to be patronized by the entire 2d Division because of its great success. It was finally adopted as a model school for the Third Army.

Not long before the armistice the craze for insignia swept over the American Expeditionary Forces. The style was set by the 81st Division, each member of which brought to France a strange-looking wildcat embroidered on the left shoulder. This appealed to the sartorial eye of the army. So the scramble began to get insignia. Armies, corps, divisions, headquarters, schools, and even small detachments appeared shortly with strange devices on their shoulders in every color and every shape. In the great scramble some one in authority in the District of Paris ordered the fleur de lys as the insignia of troops employed in that district. It soon blazed forth on the shoulders of officers, soldiers, and even Young Men's Christian Association girls and Red Cross workers. The French people who saw it began to snicker, and well they might, for if you will turn back to your Dumas you will find that once upon a time in the history of France the fleur de lys was branded on the left shoulder of every criminal.

Some time after the armistice another craze started in the A. E. F., the craze for monuments. Luckily, most of the divisions were out of the battle area or on their way home when this mania became dangerous. Otherwise we would today have as many monuments in France as on the field of Gettysburg. In traveling over the battlefields one cannot go more than five miles in any direction without meeting with a monument erected by the 1st Division.

The 2d Division was not entered in the monument race. Its monuments are to be found on every field where American troops fought in France—little crosses of wood which mean more to the division and will mean more to the pilgrim of after years than any effigy in stone and colors.

THE RECORD OF THE SECOND.

THE 2d Division played, or shared, the leading rôle in the five major battles in which American troops were engaged, at Château-Thierry, south of Soissons, at St. Mihiel, in Champagne, and in the Argonne. Official statistics show that it suffered more casualties than any other division, while it captured almost twice the number of prisoners taken by any of its rivals. It received during the war replacements to the number of 35,343, considerably more than its full strength, 28,000. That is to say, the entire division was wiped out theoretically one and one-fourth times.

The following comparison between the record of the 2d and that of the army as a whole is interesting:

	2d Division	Entire Army
Casualties	5,200	50,303
Replacements	35,343	356,964
Prisoners	12,026	60,003
Guns taken	343	1,257
Machine guns	1,350	9,073
Kilometers advanced	62	767

As there were thirty combat divisions in France, it will be seen that the 2d did much more than its share. It suffered about one-eleventh of the casualties, received almost one-tenth of the replacements, captured one-fifth of all prisoners, one-fourth of all guns, and about one-seventh of all machine guns.

Self-Determination for American Red Man

kala-Sa, a Sioux woman of pure blood and direct descendant of Sitting Bull, as well known perhaps by her married name of Mrs. Gertrude Bonnin, have attracted attention in the leading magazines, where she appears as a champion of the rights of her race. She is the Secretary of the Society of the American Indians, which since its founding eight years ago at Ohio State University has done much to advance the cause of equal rights for the original Americans. Her husband is Captain Raymond T. Bonnin, who is of French and Sioux lineage. He served in the United States Army during the European war. The Bonnins are types of the progressive, intellectual Indians who are seeking to advance the cause of the less fortunate of their breed and to bring about equal rights for all.

"The Indian and his friends," said Mrs. Bonnin the other day, "when they ask for citizenship for the red man, are answered: 'If we do not protect him unscrupulous white men will defraud him of his very eyeteeth.' In the supervision of his property these bureaucrats defraud the Indian of his human right to gain experience—earth experience—first-hand. By overpaternalism they are certainly killing the manhood and the initiative of our race. In despair, I ask, Why not disfranchise or, at least, restrict and restrain by bureau supervision these so-called unscrupulous white men and enfranchise an honest, law-abiding people, the Indians of America?' It is so un-American to manipulate the Indians' property, lands, moneys, and oil wells without the Indians' consent, on this unwarranted phrase, 'The Indian will be defrauded if we do not protect his property.' Who are we?"

Zit-kala-Sa believes that the present Indian Commissioner, Cato Sells, is doing all that he can to help the Indian, but that his hands are often tied by conditions over which he has no control.

This view is upheld in a measure by the official declaration of Mr. Sells, issued on April 17, 1917, which may be taken as a full expression of policy.

"The time has come," declared the Commissioner, "for discontinuing the guardianship of all competent Indians and giving even closer attention to the incompetent Indians, that they may the more readily achieve competency. Broadly speaking, a policy of greater liberalism will henceforth prevail in Indian administration to the end that every Indian as soon as he has been determined to be as competent to transact his own business as the average white man, shall receive full control of his property and have all his lands and moneys turned over to him, after which he will no longer be a ward of the Government."

At the same time the Commissioner promulgated the rule that able-bodied adult Indians of less than one-half Indian blood shall receive as far as may be, under the law, complete control of their property. Patents in fee shall be issued to all adult Indians of one-half or more Indian blood who may after careful investigation be found competent, "provided that, where deemed advisable, patents in fee shall be withheld for not to exceed forty acres as a home."

Further details are given in the text. The document ends as follows:

"This is a new and far-reaching declaration of policy. It means the dawn of a new era in Indian administration. It means that the competent Indian will no longer be treated as half ward and half citizen. It means reduced appropriations by the Government and more self-respect and independence for the Indian. It means the ultimate absorption of the Indian race into the body politic of the nation. It means, in short, the beginning of the end of the Indian problem. In carrying out this policy, I cherish the hope that all real friends of the Indian race will lend their aid and hearty co-operation."

The other day Alanson Skinner, an ethnologist connected with the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, was talking of this latest determined effort being made by the red men to gain equality.

"Although this is a political and economic question," said Mr. Skinner, "every scientific man who has come in contact with the American Indians cannot but be impressed with their fine qualities and their independent natures. I have spent many months with different tribes of Indians and I have never been treated with more courtesy anywhere than by them. The fact that the average Indian has so highly developed a sense of justice himself should make us feel all the more inclined to see that he has all the rights to which he is entitled. That the American Indian is well able to take care of himself, if he has equal opportunities with the white race, is very well demonstrated."

Although ever since 1641 the Caucasian race on this continent has been temporizing with the Indian problem, it has never really solved it. The first grants which Kings and Emperors in Europe were accustomed to give to lands which they had never seen took no account of the Indians except in some indefinite way which provided for the conquering of the "heathen" or the "savages."

As the white men grew stronger they pushed back the frontier into a succession of new Americas and gradually put the Indians on reservations. Three of these great tracts of Indian country were established, and then in 1878 the policy of having smaller reservations came into vogue. Congress in 1887 enacted a land severalty bill which was aimed at the abolition of the agency and the final entrance of the remnants of the Indians into full citizenship. It provided that to each Indian should be allotted a tract of land of from forty to 160 acres, and this method of dealing with the vexed problem had the sanction of the United States Supreme Court.

Although much progress has been made since the early days of the colony of Virgina, when it was set forth that "an Indian could not hold office, be a capable witness or hunt on patented land," there is a great deal to be done, in the opinion of the champions of the race, before they are in possession of complete rights.

The Indian population of the United States is placed at 336,243, of whom 85,674 are of school age, although provision has been made for the instruction of only 63,476, leaving 22,972 eligibles without the means of getting an education.

Ten thousand North American Indians, more than two-thirds of them volunteers, were in the armies of these United States in the European war. In the Hospital Corps and with the ambulances Indian women were enrolled. The race contributed to the Red Cross large sums, for many of them are wealthy; they helped in all kinds of war work both here and over there, and bought $1,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds.

The case for the Indian is summed up in a set of resolutions adopted by a committee representing all the organizations concerned. Its Chairman was the Rev. Henry Roe Cloud, an Omaha Indian and a graduate of Yale University. Among its members were S. M. Brosius, the Washington agent of the Indian Rights Association; the Right Rev. H. L. Burleson, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of South Dakota; John W. Clark, Secretary of the National Indian Association; Mrs. Bonnin, (Zit-kala-Sa,) Secretary of the Society of American Indians; the Rev. Thomas C. Moffett, Superintendent of the Presbyterian Indian Mission Work, and the Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Protestant Episcopal Board of Missions.

It is the unanimous opinion of these experts that the Indian problem should be solved by making the Indians part of our population, instead of keeping them longer apart as aliens and quasi-outcasts.

Hungary's Stony Path of Revolution

be access to the sea or a market for the surplus grain.

Yet the faith that Karolyi would prove the magician to override this mountain of troubles persisted. It was rooted in the conviction that the victorious Allies must come to his aid.

There is little doubt that Karolyi took up his task as the first President of the Republic of Hungary with optimistic faith in his ability to build securely on the principles he had avowed. He had been prepared when he assumed power to meet the hopes of the revolutionists. All that was necessary was that the Allies should restrain the surrounding enemies from transgressing the terms of the armistice, which included distinct lines of demarkation beyond which there was to be no invasion by hostile forces and which also provided that the existing civil administration should continue in occupied territory. He even cherished the hope of reconciliation with the enemies.

Karolyi had a plan all worked out to further a state of friendship for mutual advantage. It was the much-discussed Donaubund and was based upon the theory of a customs union for all the States bordering upon the Danube, whose natural commercial outlet would be the Adriatic. He called this the United States of Eastern Europe. It was to include Czechoslovakia, German Austria, Hungary, Jugoslavia, and such other States as might eventually be created out of the dismembered Hapsburg monarchies. Even Poland was to be invited. There was to be no other tie beyond free commercial intercourse, a common medium of monetary exchange and absence of tariff barriers, with ports on the Adriatic for all. It was Karolyi's opinion that this would forever dispose of the Balkan problem and bring eternal peace where there had been eternal strife. There would be interchange of products, prosperity would be assured to all, and geographical boundaries and racial barriers would be forgotten.

It was not to be. The unbiased historian must determine whether the statesmen of the Paris Peace Conference erred in not supporting the Hungarian statesman. They did go so far as to warn their protégés (the Czechs, Serbians, and Rumanians) against advancing their armed forces beyond the lines fixed by the armistice, but there was no compulsion behind the warning and it was heeded not at all.

Up to the close of March Karolyi fought on, still hoping to convince the Paris Conference and the constantly encroaching enemies.

"Karolyi," one of his critics told me, "is prisoner to the Socialists. It is true that he always has been radical, but that was because he had no chance with Tisza, and to be in politics against him it was necessary to take the radical side. Now he has been forced beyond his depth."

Karolyi was in a grim humor when I went to see him in the big palace where the Hapsburgs used to reside as Kings of Hungary on their occasional visits to Budapest. He is a huge man, suggesting the type of the mediaeval baron who feasted much and drank constantly in the intervals of fighting, a suggestion created by his figure alone, however. But for a slight deformity of his upper lip, almost hidden by a closely clipped brown mustache, he would be a striking'y handsome man, of mild though dignified bearing. He has an unusually high forehead and calm, reflective eyes which showed little severity even in his existing state of aggravation, which was due to the news just received that the English Admiral Trowbridge, acting as the agent of the Allies, had ordered all the shipping on the Danube turned over to the Czechoslovaks.

In the adjoining room a crowd of Cabinet Ministers and other important personages were waiting to see him, but he was deliberate in speech and manner, doubtless hoping that I would repeat what he told me to some one in authority, and I may as well confess that I did this as soon as I returned to Vienna, where there was an American mission representing the Paris Peace Conference.

"We must put our ideals for the future and our contemplated contribution to the new world on the shelf," he said, with a momentary lowering of his eyelids, so that I could not see his real expression. "When the house has a leaking roof the tenant does not devote himself to decorating its walls. We must meet our desperate demands of the present. We must have food, coal and raw materials to provide necessary nourishment and the means to work. We must have back such of our territory as supplies the essentials to our continued existence. Either that, or—"

He did not finish the sentence, but looked out of the window over the great square, where many a brilliant scene of pomp and majesty had been enacted during the days of the monarchy. It was practically deserted now.

"We have the problem of remaking a State which is maimed and burdened beyond endurance," he continued, "a State which cannot exist if the threats of its enemies are carried out. I am not a party man, now that I am at the head of the State, and I am sympathetic to all suggested reforms. I feel that only through absolute democracy can the State be revived. After years of oppression for the benefit of individuals the opportunity is now presented to cast off all shackles and permit the development of all the people. The times call for a new phrase which shall touch all hearts, revive sinking spirits and make for sympathy and confidence among all the peoples of this part of the world."

Again he paused as though to collect his thoughts. He was speaking in English, which he found rather difficult, often having to grope for the words to express his meaning, and I suggested that I would understand German if he found that easier. There was a frown of dissent.

"The call of democracy may yet bring friendship and good-will among those who today are set up as bitter enemies," he went on. "All these peoples now arrayed against each other, the Serbs and Croatians on one side, Rumanians and Transylvanians on another, Czechs and Slovaks on a third, Ruthenians on a fourth, Ukrainians on a fifth, German Austrians on a sixth, and ourselves on a seventh, are only interfering with one another. Each nation needs an outlet to the sea, if it is to exist, and each is deliberately blocking the others. Salvation for all would result if all would unite in a confederacy with a customs union and a purging of chauvinism. What we need here is a United States of Eastern Europe. It is the only way out. The United States has shown that.

"I have been in America many times, and I know that while you include many races there is no such thing in your country as a nationality question. Without interfering with the habits or manner of expression of the individual you have managed to achieve unity for the country among black and yellow and white, German, English, Spanish, French, Italian, and a dozen others besides the natives. That points the way for us, and the appeal for democratization of all peoples is the basis upon which to proceed. I have tried to approach the other peoples through this. At the moment there has been unwillingness to respond, but it must come. As it is, you might compare us all to the rooms in this palace if all were closed against each other and each against the base of supplies, so that the occupants of all would starve and freeze."

There was a distinct touch of bitterness in his tone as he touched on the responsibility of the Entente for the animosities which had developed. France especially he charged with the delay in making peace. That should have come within two months of the armistice at the latest, he insisted. There was more emotion and, it seemed to me, also more sincerity in his voice and manner now than when he had spoken of the possibility of friendship between the present enemies.

"Today," he complained, "it is too late, or almost too late, to avoid some of the bitter consequences of this delay. Today we find one people freezing because it has no coal, another without necessary fats, a third without wheat, a fourth with no means of clothing itself; and of each of these essentials some have a surplus which they are unable or (through Entente influence) unwilling to send to those without. What is the result? Misery, suffering and ever more fertile ground for the agitator for disorder. Look at Hungary. We are an industrial as well as an agrarian State and we have no raw materials and lack food. Through the encouragement or, at least, connivance of the Entente, we can get neither coal nor raw materials from the sources of our past supplies.

"Hence our factories are idle—factories which at this moment should be large producers; many thousands of workmen are idle and the State is compelled to support them, though it cannot afford to do so. Everybody knows what State support of thousands means. I am frank to say that I look forward with apprehension to the return of normal conditions, when these people can no longer live upon State bounty and will have to work. The change may not be brought about so easily."

Did the Entente want to force Hungary into a new alliance with Germany? he asked. Did it want to force German Austria into such an alliance? There was a period, he said, when Austria and Hungary might have joined in an alliance which would have excluded Germany, but he doubted that Austria would agree to that now. Had the Entente said to Bohemia, Serbia, and Rumania, "Stay where you are until the Peace Conference can decide upon your claims," there would have been an entirely different situation.

"Remember," he said, in concluding, "that history has demonstrated more than once that the victor may prove to be the loser. Look at the situation in Germany today. Extreme radicalism is growing stronger all the time. It may yet be embraced by the whole people. And remember that Germany is not Russia. If Germany should take up communism seriously it will develop it successfully. There need not be the extremes and the follies the Russian leaders were guilty of. Even there they are learning. Lenin has let down many successive bars. Today it is possible legally for the workers to decide that they will run an enterprise on a capitalistic basis.

"I cannot understand the logic of the Entente. Even when it comes to granting us supplies the performance is absurd. Wheat is to be shipped from America, five thousand kilometers away, when there is abundance within fifty kilometers, held back by arbitrary force. Raw materials within one hundred kilometers are refused us while again they are to be shipped to us from the other side of the Atlantic. Our own pigs—250,000 of them—are sent over our railways from what was part of our own territory to the Czechs, while we must go hungry until pork can be brought from Chicago or the Argentine. Why drive us to desperation, which may bring on that very Bolshevism feared by the Entente as much as by us?"

Like the Germans and the Austrians, Karolyi could not accept the severity of the Allies as just. If the old Governments which had been responsible for the waging of the war—putting aside the disputed responsibility for its origin—were still in power—but now the people had put them aside and were devoted to democracy. They surely ought to be met in kindness. Like the Germans, also, Karolyi trotted out the spectre of Bolshevism. Even though nobody could accuse him of being allied with the Germans, their arguments on this point were identical. I had heard all he said in almost the same words in Berlin. But the Germans were cleverer than he. They only threatened and gave way when the threats failed. Whatever may come finally, Ebert and his followers did not invite Bolshevism. Karolyi did. When I was in Hungary the leaders of the Bolsheviki were in jail and their propaganda was regarded with contempt. It was Karolyi who opened the jail doors, invited Bela Kun to take over the Government. It was an act of desperation aimed at the Allies for their refusal to help him.

"Now to put the old clock together again"

An Interview with Karolyi, Who Preceded the Violent Bela Kun, Now Overthrown in Turn—Allies Blamed for Country's Misfortunes

By CHARLES J. ROSEBAULT.

The writer, revisiting familiar scenes after the war, found Budapest, once the most alluring of capitals, hungry and unhappy. The cafés, where gypsy musicians had formerly set the blood to dancing, were closed; the promenade along the Danube, haunt of cavaliers and lovers, was deserted.

THERE have been enough revolutions in recent years to make it possible to draw therefrom certain deductions. One is that they are almost invariably undertaken at the wrong time. If their leaders really understood their business they would do their upsetting when things generally were in fine shape, when commerce and industry were flourishing, crops of record size and quality, raw materials abundant, and banks bursting with money. Then they would have the material resources with which to try out reasonably and deliberately the theories and principles of their faith.

Our own Bolsheviki and I. W. W. showed extraordinary intelligence in trying to gain power lately when this country was bloated with riches. Had they won out there is no telling what they might not have accomplished for the cause of communism. Elsewhere the revolutions have been launched when all was confusion and misery and when even the old-established authorities were finding it difficult to work out their material problems.

So it has been that the average revolution has started with these handicaps. People were depressed and bitter and unusually critical. Under such conditions they want food, even though there be none, and they are as intolerant of excuses from indealists as from ordinary selfish politicians. So, too, they want work and clothing and other things which cannot be provided and they refuse to be put off with promises.

The revolution in Hungary had some unusually hopeful aspects. To be sure, the country was drained of its raw materials, its cities were overcrowded with refugees, food was scarce and only to be had at exorbitant prices, and the enemy was victorious. But people had grown accustomed to misery, and now there were two wonderful, ameliorating circumstances: the war was over and the Hapsburgs were finally and definitely removed. And then Count Michael Karolyi would be their leader. That fact was accepted as justifying confidence by the great majority of Hungarians long after the revolution. I found it everywhere I went, even before I reached Hungary.

At Berne I met Mme. Schwimmer, the lady who had persuaded Mr. Ford to send his famous peace ship. She had exerted the same talents on the new Government and had drawn the appointment of Minister to Switzerland. A woman Minister! It almost upset all the Chancelleries of Europe and, finally, resulted in a refusal on the part of Switzerland to accept her. Mme. Schwimmer confided to me that she was relieved thereby of great anxieties. The rules as to the length of the cutaway coat to be worn at certain functions and the width of the braid compulsory at others had caused her sleepless nights. But her failure in diplomacy had not terminated her activities. She had a suite at the Bernerhof at which there were many conferences. And to all and sundry she made it clear that the selection of Count Karolyi for the Presidency of the new republic was certain to prove its salvation. Ernest Ludwig, who had been Consul at Chicago under the Hapsburgs, and who was now special representative at Berne for the repatriation of Hungarian prisoners of war, was equally satisfied that Karolyi was the man of the hour. When I reached Vienna I found responsible opinion, even where it was not friendly to Karolyi or his political views, convinced that he could accomplish more than any other Hungarian in public life. This view was indorsed at Budapest.

There were difficulties enough beyond those already mentioned. The enmities created by centuries of Hapsburg misrule had naturally been intensified by the war. The Serbs and the Rumanians had old and new scores to settle. The Hapsburgs had always kept the Hungarians and the Czechs apart, fanning the fires of racial hatred whenever there was the slightest sign of a rapprochement between these powerful members of the empire. It was by keeping them quarreling that the monarchs thought to hold down their several national aspirations. Now, the Czechs, uniting political opportunity with the spirit of revenge, were moving against the old enemy, rendered powerless by defeat and the conditions of the armistice. All the non-Magyars, even those with whom they had hitherto lived in comparative harmony, were falling away, and in their departure taking along something essential to the future prosperity of Hungary.

Within its old borders Hungary had held all the elements required to make a successful country. There was a central plain, rich in grain and fruits and grazing lands, while in the mountains, which formed the natural boundaries, were coal, iron, oil, and salt. The only deficiency was in coal. During the war Hungary had fed the rest of the monarchy as well as itself. But now the country was falling apart. The mountains were moving out and taking all the minerals along with them. All that would be left would be the flat lands, which could never be self-sustaining. There would not even

Native Race Proposed for Full Citizenship in a Bill Now Before Congress

By JOHN WALKER HARRINGTON.

SELF-DETERMINATION for races hitherto held in tutelage, whether sternly repressive or benevolently assimilative, is the fashion and tendency of the moment—one of the results of the breaking up of old groups and the shattering of old habits and traditions which has followed the great war. What we have heard most about is self-determination of lesser European races—Poles, Lithuanians, Czechoslovaks, Jugoslavs, and the rest. There is also the case of the Irish. What most people, perhaps, have not remembered is that we have in this country also a race held in tutelage—not the imported negro, who has by law all the rights of a citizen, but the native Indian, who has been excluded from those rights and whose status has been that of the ward of the nation, not the citizen.

Now, in the opinion of leading Indians and men who are not Indians, but have been in close touch with the Indians' development, the time has come to make an end of this anomaly.

To give the Indian citizen's rights is the purpose of a bill favorably reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives.

This bill was drafted by Charles D. Carter, a member of the House from Oklahoma, and himself of Indian blood, and its advocates are looking forward hopefully to its speedy enactment into law.

The measure provides that every person born of the Indian blood shall be called a citizen of the United States and be subject to all civil and criminal laws, without in any way interfering with his tribal rights, and that he shall, upon his competency being established, receive a patent in fee for his lands. The appointment of three commissions to pass upon the qualifications of applicants is provided.

Wisconsin Indians of the Progressive Competent Type Who Desire Citizenship

Captain Raymond T. Bonnin, U. S. Army, of French and Sioux Descent

It is the position of those Indians who have attained citizenship after an arduous struggle for their rights that the shackles of paternalism have been on their race long enough. On the average, they say, the Indian is just as well equipped to look after himself as is the man of any other strain. Sometimes, they add, he is much better equipped than many of the aliens who have in recent years landed on these shores.

The bill excepts the Five Civilized Nations and the Osages because these Indians already have citizenship. They also have automobiles and motor trucks. They send their sons and daughters to the best colleges in the East; they live in well-appointed houses, and draw substantial dividends from oil and mining stocks. Sometimes a Cherokee will put on all his war paint and his tribal trappings and fare to town in a limousine, but when he appears in the halls of Congress to represent his constituency there is no trace of the tepee about him.

One of the leading proponents of equal rights for the Indian, for instance, is one who has a trace of the lineage of the red man himself, Robert Latham Owen, senior Senator from Oklahoma. Although born in Virginia, the statesman went to Indian Territory in his youth. As the Secretary of the Board of Education of the Cherokee Nation, United States Indian Agent for the Five Civilized Tribes and owner and editor of the periodical, The Cherokee Chieftain, the Senator has done notable work for the cause of equal rights. The best service he has rendered, however, is in being what he is—for surely any one who has succeeded in the real estate business, has made a fortune as an up-to-date farmer, and is the organizer of a bank, has furnished a demonstration that he is well adapted for taking care of himself.

Oklahoma has two members in the United States House of Representatives who have Indian blood in their veins. William Wirt Hastings is of Cherokee parentage. He was born in 1866 in the old Indian Territory. On his graduation from the Cherokee Male Seminary he went to Vanderbilt University, which gave him the degree of LL.B. He became in 1896 the attorney for the Cherokee Nation and represented it in the winding up of its tribal affairs in Washington. He was a delegate at large to the National Democratic Convention at Baltimore in 1912. Besides serving as a member of the present Congress Mr. Hastings is the regular attorney for the Cherokee tribe in all its public relations.

The name hardly suggests Indian kinship, and yet Charles Daugherty Carter was born near Boggy Depot in an old fort of the Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory. He attended as a boy the Chickasaw Labor Academy near Tishimingo, I. T. He worked on a ranch as a cowboy for a while and then became a clerk in a store. Mr. Carter rose to high place in the councils of the Chickasaws, serving as School Superintendent and Mining Trustee and occupying various other positions. He is a Director of the Ardmore Bank in his home town of Ardmore, Okla., and he is the member of Congress responsible for the Indian enfranchisement bill.

That the American Indian can undertake exacting financial labors and duties is shown by the career of Dihihi, whose cognomen in good Cherokee means "The Killer." He is a good Indian, however, and by taking a quick, sharp glance at our Liberty bonds we may see his signature, Houston B. Teehee, the Anglicized form of his name. He is the Register of the Treasury of the United States. Born in that part of the Indian Territory now known as Sequoyah County, he started to paddle his own canoe at an early age. After his graduation from the Cherokee National Male Seminary he became in turn traveling salesman, bank cashier, lawyer, and Alderman. He served for two terms as Mayor of Tahlequah, Okla. Next Mr. Teehee went to the Legislature, resigned to become District Attorney, and from that post proceeded to a responsible position as probate attorney for the Indians of the Cherokee tribe.

In many walks of life the Indian has distinguished himself in competition with the white man. General Ely Parker served on the staff of General Grant, while another Parker, known as Gabe, was connected with the United States Treasury, and a third of the name, Arthur C. Parker, is State Archaeologist of New York. Indians who have become successful as physicians are Dr. Carlos Montezuma of Chicago, the Apache, and Dr. Charles A. Eastman, who is also a writer. The literary work of the race has been graphic and not without force and originality, from the days of Schoolcraft, a writer of Indian descent, from whose books Longfellow drew the inspiration for "Hiawatha," to such modern writers as John M. Oskison, journalist and teller of tales.

In recent years the writings of Zit-

Smoldering Fires

A MATCH—flame a-flicker—falls to the ground. You step on it—and it is out. Ignore it—forget it—and the wind fans it to a flame. Devastation, poverty and death follow in its path. A falling lamp destroyed the City of Chicago. What started as "a small trivial fire" burned the entire business section of Baltimore.

The little smoldering fires of disease are just like that. All too frequently they are hidden from sight. Somewhere inside they take hold and spread.

Ignorance and neglect are the winds that fan the little smoldering fires into flame.

Just as there are special men and special apparatus and special departments in every city to fight the fires of material just so there are now special workers to fight the fires of disease.

The annual health service of the Life Extension Institute is not unlike that of the Fire Wardens of the great Northwest—watchers who search day and night from their observation posts on the tops of the highest mountains, ready to give warning and stamp out as quickly as possible the smallest fires—fires which might, if left unchecked, devastate and destroy the vast and invaluable forests.

Recently one of these observers on the top of Mt. Hood, 11,000 feet high, reported smoke sixty miles away. It proved to be smoke from a little, innocent, hard-working donkey engine, but nothing escapes the ceaseless vigil of these men and no department of the government is conducted more efficiently.

In the vast forest of human lives the same need for vigorous and constant watchfulness exists. There are little smoldering fires in each life which are easily discoverable and can be stamped out entirely or carefully watched to prevent their doing further damage.

To avoid searching for these fires lest we find them and have the opportunity of putting them out or of checking them, is certainly an artless attitude toward life and one which leaves a man's whole physical future uncharted and unprotected.

The Life Extension Institute was established by a group of scientists, publicists, and business men, who desired to provide a self-supporting central institution of national scope devoted to the science of increasing human happiness and efficiency and preventing human misery and inefficiency—a responsible and authoritative source from which the public might draw knowledge and inspiration in avoiding needless sickness and premature death.

A provision has been made for the utilization of a substantial portion of the dividends in public health work, under the trusteeship of ex-President William Howard Taft and Professor Irving Fisher. Two-thirds of the common stock is held in trust by Mr. Taft and Professor Fisher for this purpose.

A complete physical examination at the Life Extension Institute will tell you just where you stand—your health assets—your disease liabilities. You will no longer guess or worry as to whether you are well or not. You will know!

The great protective value of the Institute's examination lies in the fact that every region of the body is covered. The Institute's examiners carefully search the whole body for any obscure, unknown or neglected condition which may be undermining your vitality and threatening your future welfare and happiness.

There is absolutely nothing unpleasant or depressing about the Institute's examination service. On the contrary it is an optimistic, cheerful, constructive service that gives to the member renewed confidence and courage.

It is an all-round life-saving service designed to bring to you the comforting news of good health, as well as to detect danger and warn you if warning is necessary.

Another thought—

Your membership in the Life Extension Institute is not a matter of a few details. It is an annual association with a scientific organization designed to help you protect yourself from dangers—both present and future.

The Life Extension Institute has examined more than 100,000 men, women and children. In this vast number many lives have been saved—much illness, suffering, and poverty prevented.

Ex-President William Howard Taft is Chairman of the Board of Directors. Other officers and directors are Prof. Irving Fisher, Chairman Hygiene Reference Board; Maj.-Gen. William C. Gorgas, Consultant in Sanitation; Eugene Lyman Fisk, M. D., Medical Director; Harold A. Ley, President; James D. Lennehan, Secretary; Robert W. de Forest, Vice-President American Red Cross; Arthur W. Eaton, President Eaton, Crane & Pike Co.; Edward L. Pierce, President Solvay Process Company; Henry H. Bowman, President Springfield National Bank.

The Life Extension Institute was founded for the public good. Its work is national. In addition to the Head Office Staff, the Institute has more than 6,000 physicians in all principal cities of the United States and Canada.

There is not a man or woman reading this message today who doesn't realize the value of a thorough physical examination or who hasn't decided, at sometime or other, to get it.

We do not wish to frighten you. But don't put it off too long. Every day counts.

The cost of the Institute's Annual Health Service, including its standardized physical examination, quarterly urinalyses, educational service, and other valuable privileges, is $15 a year. The Head Office is conveniently located here in New York. It will not take more than an hour or an hour and a half of your time. We tell you frankly it is the best investment you can possibly make.

A coupon is printed below for the convenience of men and women desiring full information regarding the Life Extension Institute.

Illustrations by "The Men of 1860" on Exhibition

AN ILLUSTRATION
"The Lost Piece of Silver," by John Millais, at the New York Public Library

WHY the "Men of 1860" it is difficult to say. They sprang up in the fifties and lasted until the eighties, but they wear the badge of a great decade in illustration, and it is pleasant to see them well represented in the remarkable collection of illustrated books of four centuries which forms one of the Summer exhibitions at the New York Public Library.

The illustrations that came before the public in shabbiest dress, like a row of Cinderellas, on the pages of Moxon's "Tennyson" in 1857, were made by men whose attitude toward illustration was quite as respectful, in fact, precisely the same, as their attitude toward other forms of art. The woodblock, at that time the haughty means of communication between an artist and the larger public, offered them an opportunity to indulge their imagination dramatically or romantically, as they might choose, or to be simple realists; but as a rule they were humble men of heart and worked out their designs in scrupulous accordance with the text.

The pre-Raphaelites, Hunt, Millais, Rossetti, and their followers, were scrupulous by creed, and it is an adventure rich in significance to compare their vivid emotional drawings with the writings illustrated and observe how closely the latter were followed in spirit and detail, while the designs as works of art were of the highest originality. Even Rossetti's untrammeled independence of mind permitted him to "allegorize on his own hook" only with poems of such general character as "The Palace of Art," "The Lady of Shalott," "Sir Galahad," &c., but with these, it must be confessed, he went as far afield as possible, and left Tennyson at sea as to where he found his clues in the text.

The woodcuts assembled to represent this stimulating period in English illustration include, of course, much of the pre-Raphaelite work. The drawings by John Millais for the Parables are among the most striking. The series, like so many of the interesting undertakings of the time, was due to the initiative of the Dalziel Brothers, and the publishers as well as the artist entered upon the work in a spirit of reverence that interfered very seriously with its prompt execution. One finds Millais writing to Dalziel about the designs:

"It is almost unnecessary for me to say that I cannot produce these quickly even if, grudging, I give all my time to them. They are separate pictures, and so I exert myself to the utmost to make them as complete as possible. I can do ordinary illustrations as quickly as most men, but these designs can scarcely be regarded in the same light—each Parable I illustrate perhaps a dozen times before I fix, and the 'Hidden Treasures' I have altered on the wood at least six times."

They were not indeed ordinary illustrations and Millais might well have been content to have his fame as an illustrator rest on these magnificent arrangements of flowing line. In the drawing for "The Lost Piece of Silver" the curves of the woman's bending figure, contrasted with the strong straight line of the broom and the rectangular opening in the wall, make as fine a composition as can be found in the whole range of British art. In the "Leaven" there is the same superb combination of architectural severity of line with swirling folds of drapery. Millais produced twenty of the drawings in seven years and then stopped, as the world was too much with him soon and late to permit his going on with what he called his "labor of love."

Akin to Millais in linear feeling was Frederick Sandys. His illustrations for the Cornhill Magazine, Good Words, and Once a Week are filled with authentic detail based on tireless reference to archaeological material, but the detail is kept in its place and seldom interferes with the dignity of the essential lines. Sandys was colder than Millais, however, and his generalizations leave out as much as possible of human interest.

Arthur Boyd Houghton was another highly original illustrator in the 1860 group. The fortunate possessors of the little book of poems called "Child Life," published by Routledge in 1865, know very well his versatility and the vein of fine humor that runs through his easy invention. He was called by his associates "The Young Genius," and he was one, needing only a glance at his model to fix the leading characteristics in his mind and overflowing with pictorial ideas for every kind of subject, the kind of illustrator who is the publisher's best friend. His drawings for "The Arabian Nights" were particularly happy examples of his admirable talent. He was born in India, and his associations there gave him especially favorable opportunities for collecting material that would add Oriental color to his compositions.

With Frederick Walker a quite different type of artist was introduced, one who had a more modern feeling for the fusion of details in a general tone and whose love of England and English types lent to his work an attractive warmth and tenderness. He made all but two of the illustrations for Thackeray's "Philip," and his friendship with Thackeray is one of the prettiest episodes in the annals of art. A story is told of the first meeting of the two that illustrates the character of each. Walker was brought to Thackeray to see if he would "do" as an interpreter of Thackeray's ideas. No doubt the young applicant wore his shyness on his sleeve, but Thackeray was no daw to peck at the infirmities of his brothers. Perceiving that Walker was nervous to the verge of collapse he said to him, "Now I am going to shave. Suppose you take your pencil and make a sketch of my back." The sketch was capital, but if Walker had been obliged to draw face to face with his model he probably could not have held his pencil.

One of the men whose name is associated with Walker's in the work of the period was George John Pinwell, and he also had his idiosyncrasy of being somewhat in advance of his time. His impatience of detail made him noticeable in a group which rarely failed to make use of profuse accessories.

Pinwell was only 33 when he died, and was in his early twenties when he began working for the Dalziels, but he already had produced designs for embroidery and illustrations for books as well as a few designs for silversmiths. Unlike Walker, he always drew from the actual scene and disliked above everything having to work against time. He once refused a commission for a sea picture because he would not paint his seaman in town from a model, and he kept back his drawing, "The Old Clock," because he couldn't find the right kind of clockmaker. In this care for exactitude he outdid the pre-Raphaelites, but his methods were very unlike theirs. Concerning the series of illustrations for Goldsmith, his masterpiece in that kind, a writer in The Spectator said: "His drawings really help us to understand or at least to realize the meaning of a writer who deals in broad contrasts rather than in subtle differences of character, and as the difficulty of such illustration is the greater, so also is the artist's merit when it is overcome."

As a man Pinwell, albeit brusque and even rough in manner from lack of early training, must have been a charming companion. He loved music and children, was gay and social, yet fond of home, could not bear to see a fellow-artist in trouble, and possessed a quaint talent for acrobatic tricks that gave infinite pleasure to his group of friends. Some one has referred to him as having in him "a good London calman spoiled."

Whistler also belongs to the group, having contributed in 1862 to Good Words and Once a Week. They were engraved by the Dalziel Brothers and Swain, and in the printed versions show much of the delicacy and individuality of the Whistler etchings with also a nice deference to illustrative character.

These names are few of them familiar to the public of today. Old volumes of Trollope with their illustrations by Millais stand forgotten upon out of the way bookshelves. Christina Rossetti's "Sing Song," "very tastefully illustrated by Arthur Hughes," is rarely seen, although probably some collector knows what has become of the manuscript of the book with its sketches by Christina herself, sketches of which Hughes "made very little use." A few people have treasured their "Alice in Wonderland," with the Tenniel illustrations, fewer the more elaborate "Lalla Rookh," illustrated by the same hsnd in a more sophisticated mood.

One reason for the indifference toward these humble temples of art is that they are as temples so uncommonly humble. The illustrations bore the whole burden of making them beautiful, and the fine Morris idea of once more harmonizing the illustration and the page it illustrates was not yet visible on the horizon.

It soon followed, however, and in a vein of decorative fancy Walter Crane and Kate Greenaway and Randolph Caldecott produced drawings on pages that were especially designed for them, to be succeeded by Arthur Rockham and Edmund Dulac and Charles Robinson and many other accomplished draftsmen. They cover a much wider field than the illustrators of the "golden sixties"; their fancy is derived from many sources. They work with ardor and great skill. Very naturally, they lack the homogeneity of the smaller group, and most of them lack also the authority that comes from depth of experience. The 1860 people were sometimes naïve but almost always very deep. They plumbed all of life for their scraps of art, and no one familiar with their histories but knows how much thought and labor went to the drawings made at first directly on the block and known to the world only through the engraver's version of the original idea. At times this version seemed to depart from the original as far as the drawings by careless illustrators depart from their text, but one thing is very clear to a dispassionate observer of the Library exhibition—the limitations of the old method were a source of strength.

In the Dalziel autobiography a dignified justification of the engraver occurs: "Touching the old cry of defective reproduction, we say that at times there could not fail to be some amount of depreciation, but never such as justified the senseless and vulgar remarks made by certain critics, which can only be passed over in consideration of their total want of technical knowledge of the art, and of the conditions under which much of the work was produced. Coarse epithets have been used toward men who were devoting, with all possible earnestness, their skill to an art for the reproduction of work for popular issues. Wood engraving, being no exception to other arts, demands conditions necessary for the production of perfect work. First, the man who makes the drawing ought to know the capabilities of the material and should work accordingly; second, the engraver should have all the true instincts of an artist, and, third, he must have the full interval of time to perform his work with proper care. A large amount of wood engraving being done on the rush it was a common thing to burn the midnight oil and the engraver's eyes at the same time, and it is a marvel that so much beautiful, artistic work was done under such conditions." Visitors to the Library exhibitions will agree with the Dalziels that it is a marvel.

Lawn Tennis Comes Into Its Own Again

Approach of National Championship Tournament Finds Fields Open, with Japanese Player as a Leading Aspirant—Mlle. Lenglen of France Will Visit America Soon

WITH the tennis season nearing its climax, the game is again safely back on a pre-war basis in this country. For the greater part of two years many of the stars had been away in various branches of army and navy service, but one by one the transports have brought them home. There is no lack of quality in the entrees for the national doubles at Longwood this week, or the national singles championship at Forest Hills in the week of Aug. 25.

The element of international competition, always important in the annual tournament, is revived. Although the Davis Cup matches were abandoned during the war and will not be resumed until next year, Norman E. Brookes, Gerald L. Patterson, Randolph Lycett, and R. V. Thomas, all from Australia, will be playing hereabout this month. These men were recently contestants at Wimbledon, England, and there met some of the American players, coincident with whose return home they will be seen on our courts. The United States Lawn Tennis Association's Executive Committee has waived certain regulations requiring preliminary contests in order to enable the players from the antipodes to enter the doubles at Longwood. One prospective entry in the events of the month is Alfredo Marasigan, a leading racquet wielder from Manila. Japanese players are Ichiya Kumagae, Seiichiro Kashio, and Ken Yamasaki.

The only outstanding American star whose name does not appear is George M. Church. He went overseas as a Lieutenant in the United States Air Service and has not played any tennis this year. Reports have it that he sustained an injury abroad that will prevent him from appearing on the courts, but this has not been authenticated. Among the ranking players who have returned from Europe are Captain Richard Norris Williams, national singles champion in 1916; Captain Watson M. Washburn, Lieutenant Dean Mathey, Lieutenant Clarence J. Griffin, Lieutenant Willis Davis, and Lieutenant Charles S. Garland.

One young player who has come to the front rapidly in the last few years is Vincent Richards, 16 years old, holder of five titles, including the national doubles championship, shared with William T. Tilden, Jr. It may be that some observers have regarded his brilliancy with reservations, on the ground that he won in the absence of so many first-rank players, but the fact remains that the boy has developed a sturdy game, though with his partner, Tilden, he lost to William M. Johnston and Samuel T. Hardy by a score of 9—11, 6—0, 6—3, 7—5, in the East-West matches at Cincinnati.

In contrast to Richards is the veteran Hardy, who has been making a strong showing this season. He was originally of California, but now represents Chicago. In the East-West matches, where he helped to take the measure of the doubles champions, he lost in singles to R. Lindley Murray, the 1917 champion, in a five-set match by scores of 6—2, 6—3, 1—6, 2—6, 6—1. He was also eliminated by Tilden in the national clay court championship at Chicago, 6—1, 6—1. Hardy's court experience extends over thirty years, during which he has met all of the world's cracks.

S. Howard Voshell, after an early-season spurt, has been meeting with less success recently. In the East-West matches he lost his singles match to Robert M. Kinsey, 9—7, 6—1, 6—0. He also lost in doubles, paired with Wallace F. Johnson, to Kinsey and Graves, 7—5, 6—8, 6—1, 4—6, 6—3. Voshell was ranked No. 9 last year. Another New York player who figured prominently in the early part of the present season was Walter Merrill Hall, who defeated Leonard Beekman, the Princeton captain, for the Middle Atlantic States title.

Hall and Beekman paired at Seabright two weeks ago and defeated Voshell and the veteran Fred B. Alexander in a doubles match by scores of 6—2, 21—19. In the same tournament Tilden won the first leg on the new Seabright Singles Bowl, defeating Beekman easily.

The New York State championship at Utica proved the mettle of Kumagae, the playing-through champion, who won the event for the third time and thus captured the Maurice McLoughlin Bowl. The Japanese player's chief opponent was Charles S. Garland of Pittsburgh, captain of the Yale team. Garland advanced to the fifth round in the tournament at Wimbledon, England, where he was hitting a fast stride. When he was finally put out, it was by none other than Patterson, the Australian. In view of this and the ease with which Kumagae disposed of him, the Japanese looms up as a strong contender for the American ational event. Kumagae put out the Pittsburgher in straight sets, 6—2, 6—1, 6—1. This season he has defeated nearly all of the lesser stars, including Richards, Voshell, Craig Biddle, Frank Anderson, Clarence Griffin, and Ralph J. Burdick.

Johnston beat Tilden in the final of the clay court championship and has been showing all along that he is going at a fast pace. However, Kumagae beat him on the turf courts in 1918. Johnston was then at his best, and Kumagae is now regarded as better than ever. With Harold Throckmorton, Kumagae won the Middle States doubles title. The Japanese was unavoidably absent from the Longwood tournament, as were also Wallace Johnson and Tilden. There was a general scattering of the stars when the Longwood play began, at the suggestion of the National Association. The reason was that with the leaders among the stars all pitted against each other in the intersectional championships, a number of them would inevitably be eliminated, and the Australian teams would not meet the country's best when they came to play in the decisive matches. Accordingly Johnston and Griffin, who have renewed their doubles partnership, went to Kansas City for the Northwestern championships. Another team to drop out of the Longwood tourney was that of Fred B. Alexander and Voshell, who went to Cleveland. Despite this, the Longwood tournament, after having been marred at the start by the rain, produced sterling tennis.

Johnston came back after winning the Northwestern doubles title with Griffin to defend his possession of the Longwood Singles Bowl. He did this successfully, putting out Williams in straight sets, 6—3, 6—3, 6—4. Previously in the tournament Williams and Washburn had won the Eastern sectional doubles by defeating Richard Harte and G. Colket Caner in a five-set match.

The Greenwich tournament, which would have engaged a number of the players just home from Europe, was put off until September, because of the persistent rains. In the play that was completed the American Expeditionary Force men showed themselves to advantage, although no real test developed.

The Australian players made their bow at Newport last week. Having just arrived from Europe, the matches were hardly more than limbering up exercises for this week's decisive doubles at Longwood. America's leading stars, however, were in the tourney, so that their performances were against no mean opponents.

When the climax of the season is reached at Forest Hills it will see as open a field as has ever been entered for the national championship. The public interest is evident. It has been announced that the seating capacity will be limited to 7,000. Although this does not equal the number at the last Davis Cup matches, it is far and above war-time records.

The National Umpires' Association has sent out questionnaires to its 600 members asking if they can serve. More than 150 officials are needed for the matches, which will be played on thirty different courts. Prizes will be awarded to the best officials in the three classes—umpires, footfault judges, and linesmen. In addition to the national singles title, the veteran championship, the father and son, junior singles and doubles, and the boys' singles and doubles will be decided.

A new interest attaches to the women's part in the remainder of the season because of the prospect of a visit from the leading player of France, Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen, recently winner over all the British women players at Wimbledon. She is only 20 years old. Clarence Griffin, who saw her play in Europe, recently remarked that she could give Molla Bjurstedt 15 and win. The women's championship in the United States has already been decided, but Mlle. Lenglen will have all the exhibition matches she can accept.

Practical Basis of Germany's Bill

Reparation Payments Were Limited, in the Peace Arrangements, Not by Her Just Liabilities, but by Her Apparent Assets.

By ALLYN A. YOUNG,

Professor of Economics and Finance in Cornell University, Recently Specialist in Economics with the American Commission to Negotiate Peace.

ONE of the principal charges brought against the Peace Treaty both by the Germans and by opponents of the treaty in this country is that its economic and financial clauses are inexcusably drastic—that these clauses are inspired by the purpose of keeping Germany, for a long term of years, in a condition of economic servitude.

This can scarcely be alleged of the provisions which deal with Germany's foreign trade. Proposals that Germany's exports and imports should be rigorously controlled by the allied and associated States were insistently urged before several commissions of the peace conference, but these proposals, like others looking toward a virtual receivership for German trade, met with an unyielding and nearly unified opposition.

Substantially the only general limitation imposed upon Germany's power to control her own trade as she sees fit is the condition that the treatment she accords, in her tariffs and in other ways, to the trade of the allied and associated States must be uniform and non-discriminatory and at least as favorable as she accords to the trade of any other nation.

Unlike the most-favored-nation clause of the Treaty of Frankfort, which France has always claimed unduly hampered her own freedom of action, these new most-favored-nation clauses are non-reciprocal. But they are to be in force for only five years (unless continued by the League of Nations). They do not impose any serious handicap upon German trade, and because the pre-war German tariff was the cornerstone of the whole European system of discriminatory and bargaining tariffs, they may possibly lead to the simplification and improvement of that whole vicious system. If so, they will have been a first step toward that "greater equality of trade conditions" envisaged in the fourteen points.

The only considerable direct economic burden imposed upon Germany by the treaty is the reparation payment. Are the reparation terms essentially unjust? Are they intolerably severe?

It may be frankly admitted that there was no disposition at Paris to deal gently with Germany in this matter of reparation payments. If any one thing was clear it was that Germany could not be allowed to escape any part of her just obligations that it was economically and politically practicable to ask her to assume. Any other attitude would have been absurdly inconsistent with what is very properly the fundamental premise of the treaty, namely, that the moral responsibility for the war and for the devastation and economic waste that accompanied it rested definitely and unequivocally upon Germany and her allies.

But even so, there was bound to be much disappointment—in England, in France, and in Belgium, for example—that the amount exacted from Germany could not be larger. The total direct monetary costs of the war to the allied and associated States have not been far from $140,000,000,000. Add to this unprecedented and almost incredible sum the probable cost of restoration and of pensions and the total direct burden mounts up to $185,000,000,000 or more. And this takes no account of the thousand and one indirect costs of the war.

The direct costs alone are vastly more than Germany and her allies can possibly pay. Lloyd George had made a rash pre-election promise that Germany would be made to pay England's war expenses. France, with the annual charges on her debt mounting higher than her public revenues, had to assume the expense of the restoration of her devastated regions as a general national obligation. The fiscal question was the most difficult and dangerous with which the French Government had to deal. "Let the Germans pay our war taxes," had become a political slogan. Belgium, which had fought not as an ordinary belligerent, but as a neutral protecting its neutrality against one of the guarantors of that neutrality, occupied a peculiarly strong position as a claimant. Everything done in Belgium by the Germans was done in violation of international law. The Belgian claim for complete compensation not only for all damage wrought but also for all direct and incidental losses and costs of the war rested upon perfectly solid ground.

In short, if it had been in any way possible and feasible, Germany would undoubtedly have been compelled to compensate the victorious powers for all of their war losses and expenses of whatever sort. And again, assuming that such a demand would have been economically and politically feasible, there would have been few who would have challenged it as unjust.

The practical limitations upon the amount which Germany could properly be asked to pay were, as a matter of fact, fixed not by her just obligations, but by her ability to pay; not by her liabilities, but by her assets.

There is a very general impression that Germany's liability was in some measure limited by the Fourteen Points, accepted at the time of the armistice as the basis of peace negotiations. This impression is erroneous. The Fourteen Points called for the "restoration" of Belgium and of the invaded portions of France, Serbia, and Rumania. But in the President's note to Germany of Nov. 5, 1918, preceding the armistice, it was explained that, by the clauses of the Fourteen Points relating to "restoration," the allied Governments understood that "compensation will be made for all damage done to the civilian population of the Allies and their property by the aggression of Germany by land, by sea, and from the air."

Interpreting "civilian property" as it was obviously meant to be interpreted, that is, as including all public and private nonmilitary property, this imposes a very heavy liability upon Germany, but it does not cover the war expenses of the Allies. Nor can it be held to cover the general economic losses caused by the war which were not the direct results of military, naval, or aerial operations.

But these stipulations of the Fourteen Points and of the President's note of Nov. 5 did not figure in the armistice agreement in such a way as to set limits to Germany's liability. They merely fixed a minimum—an amount and kind of liability which Germany had to acknowledge as a condition to the armistice. The Allies specifically reserved the right to present other just claims against Germany.

Nevertheless, claims on account of damages to civilians and to their property had what was virtually a preferred position. They were claims for damages resulting from violations of international law; their fundamental justice was admitted by all; they had been agreed upon and accepted by the Germans prior to the framing of the treaty. It was strongly contended at Paris, especially by some of the American representatives, that the bill presented to the Germans should comprise only these admitted and acknowledged claims, together with claims for other injuries arising from violations of international law.

The opposition to such a settlement of the reparation problem came from those who felt, first, that payments made on this basis would be too small, and, second, that they would involve unfair discrimination as among the different claimant nations. The whole matter was entangled with problems of domestic finance and domestic politics. In particular there was for a while a stubborn insistence that war costs should be included in the reckoning so that, for a time at least, the Parliaments and peoples of France and England and other allied countries might be content with the illusory hope of some respite from the hard problems of after-the-war taxation.

But when even the most optimistic were convinced, as they finally were, that the maximum sum obtainable from Germany would hardly be enough to cover the bill for injuries to civilians and to civilian property, the real significance of the inclusion or exclusion of war costs was seen to be bound up with its effects on the respective shares in the reparation payments secured by the different claimant nations. In particular, England's bill for damages to civilians and to civilian property, made up as it was almost wholly of losses resulting from the sinking of ships and from air raids, was relatively small. And yet, on all equitable grounds, England was fairly entitled to a very much larger proportion of the indemnity. England had borne a large share of the financial burden of the war. She had taxed herself more heavily than any nation had ever taxed itself before in the world's history. Her economic losses were no less real, even though they might appeal less to the imagination, than the losses suffered by Belgium and Northern France through the destruction of buildings, industries, and agriculture.

The solution finally reached was a fair compromise. Direct military expenditures were not included, but the cost of providing war pensions was put into the bill. By a very liberal construction the phrase "injuries to the civilian population and to their property" may be stretched to cover these new items, on the ground that to injure, incapacitate, or otherwise reduce the earning power of the breadwinner of a family is to injure his civilian dependents. But this interpretation is obviously forced. It is better, frankly, to recognize that the compromise reached involves a justifiable departure from the Fourteen Points and from the President's note of Nov. 5.

Very likely the actual apportionment of the proceeds of the reparation payments among the claimant nations may not follow precisely the proportions that would be indicated by the relative amounts of their approved claims. But it is not probable that it will depart from this basis very far. And, at any rate, the principles adopted at Paris fix the basis of Germany's total payments, and with the further problem of allocation Germany can hardly be said to be concerned.

The pension items will make a very substantial part of the whole bill. For example, if rigid methods of valuation are used, the total amount of damages to civilians and civilian property for which Germany is liable may possibly not amount to more than twenty or twenty-five billions of dollars. Pensions may possibly add an equal sum, or one nearly as large.

Now, there is no likelihood that Ger-

Banishing Drudgery from the Farm

Automatic Sprays Have Replaced the Patient Pest Slayers of Other Days, and Hay Is Loaded by Machinery—Tilling, Planting, and Reaping with the Inventor's Aid

By C. E. CAPEN.

WHEN a Chinese comes to America his slant eyes soon take in the reason for his country's backwardness and the reason for our prosperity is plain to him. Machinery! That word spells "plenty" to us, but the Celestial hardly knows the meaning of the word. China is an agricultural nation, but the farmers there make the seed beds and harvest the crops in much the same way as their ancestors did 3,000 years ago. We, too, started in a humble way with our main reliance on a good strong back and plenty of elbow grease. But we soon quit that.

The farmer may sing the praises of the seedsman and extoll the virtues of the experiment station, but if he goes carefully over the long list of blessings that have come to him in the last fifty years he must give the inventor a place near the top. He has done as much as anybody to keep us from living in China. There is hardly a farm operation from the breaking of the ground to the storing or marketing of the crop that has not been revolutionized by new implements or vast improvements on the old ones. A bushel of wheat, which once required more than an hour of man's labor in its production, takes today only about ten minutes of his time. Where would the hungry Belgians be now had the old methods been in use in America during the last four years?

Before land can produce good crops it is often necessary to carry away an excess of water and let in the air. The old way was to dig a ditch and call the job finished. Then some one with a better head threw stones loosely into the bottom of the trench and put the dirt back. Then came the wooden box to take away the water. Now we have tile made in all sizes and of all sorts of material and machines turn them out at a rapid rate at low cost. The tiler who used to make the ditches with a long-nosed spade is losing his job to the big ditching machine that walks over the soggy field with its web feet and leaves a ditch of just the right depth at either end. The amount of backache this machine has saved would be enough to fill Atlas with envy.

The general style of the plow has remained much the same for centuries. To be sure there has been a great improvement in the design of mold boards and in the materials used. But in recent years we have learned to group several plows and concentrate a lot of power, engine or horse, under the direction of one man. In the last year a new hitch has been devised which enables a farmer to drive four, six, eight, or ten horses in tandem pairs with little difficulty. Weights keep the line of draft at right angles to the shoulders and, the pull being all in a straight line ahead, there is no waste of power in side draft. The secretary of the Percheron Society of America, the largest pure-bred horse recording association in the country, says he can take such an outfit and plow more land in a month than any tractor ever built to pull three bottoms. It would be interesting if a challenger were to come forth on his iron horse or steel mule.

The Old Laborious and Inefficient Way of Fighting the Bugs: Catching Them Alive by Beating the Vines

Overcoming Insect Pests Is Now a Simple Matter with Aid of Horse-Drawn Apparatus Spraying Poison

And after the plowman comes the planter. The sower used to go out to the field with a bag slung over one shoulder and used the other arm to scatter the seed over the ground. He still does it with some seeds, grass seed, for instance, but more often he has a little whirligig arrangement attached to the sack for throwing the little pellets far and wide or he pushes a long slim box on a skinny wheelbarrow up and down the field. But like as not across the fence you will find some young fellow steering a tractor that is hauling a combination grain drill and seeder. The disks cut into the soil and deposit the seed of wheat, barley, rye or oats, and from a separate compartment comes a sprinkling of grass, clover or alfalfa seed that does not require deep covering of earth.

While the crops are growing there is usually an army of pests that must be destroyed or held at bay. They range from the ultra-microscopic bacteria to the visible army worm and others as shameless. In the old days one of the numerous jobs for small boys on the farm was killing bugs. Any middle-aged man (and some younger) who has spent his youth on the farm will remember how he trudged along those endless rows knocking the gaudy Colorado potato beetle into a tin pan or an old paint pail. That job is about lost to the country boy, and he probably is shedding no tears over it. The spraying machine, which covers several rows at once, now deposits a poison mist on potatoes, cantaloupes, cucumbers, and any other crops likely to be benefited by that treatment.

Of all the more modern farm machines the grain harvester has probably had more influence on the welfare of bread-eating millions than any other. The gap between the old cradle and this complex implement is as wide as that between the simple sundial and a fine watch. Now the harvester is pulled by a gas or kerosene tractor which can be guided from the seat of the former just as a team of horses would be driven. An engine may become overheated more easily in the hot weather of harvest, but the driver never fears to keep it working because of sunstroke.

Horses and mules are still far from extinction on American farms—we have about 25,000,000 of them—but if they ever disappear before the advance of the motor-driven machine we will still have to make hay for the cattle and sheep. Haying is a big, bulky job, and requires a lot of perspiring effort, but the inventor has made the work easier at many points. The picturesque haying scene with the strong-backed pitchers throwing the big bunch of fragrant feed to the top of the high load has disappeared on the larger farms. The mechanical loaders, with various improvements to make it operate well in thin or light hay and in the wind, makes it possible for one man and a boy to do the job that formerly took three men, and the load is on the wagon in a jiffy.

These are only a few of the big things that the inventor has done for the farmer, but these alone have done enough to change farming from drudgery to a business that should appeal to anybody who doesn't mind getting up early in the morning and cranking the machinery.

Queer Phantasies of the Alcoholic Dimension

That Super-Plane of "White Magic," Into Which John Barleycorn Introduces His Devotees, Discussed by a Group of Those Who Know

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES.

I NEVER knew until lately how much real tragedy was concealed in that old saw, 'Birds of a feather flock together,'" said the ex-All-Nighter at the Club of Worried Good Fellows as he drained slowly and with reminiscent gurgles his "dry" pousse café.

"And it isn't so much because the feathers are the same as it is that the birds have the same habits. Did you ever hear of a man who was a steady drinker, who lined up every morning for his cocktail—I mean, of course, before the dawn of the great bone-dry age—who took his wine or his beer and his brandy with his dinner and supper, who delighted in the midnight highball or the rickey, and who always went to bed generous of heart and lit up of face—did you ever hear of a man like this who had as a chum a man who never drank, who couldn't drink, who wouldn't drink, or who dared not drink?

"No, Sir, boys; the souse and the nonsouse do not mix. And no one regrets this more than I, who have punished the stuff for twenty-five years. One of my closest friends, the man whom I regard most among all the men I have ever met, the man whose bank account was interchangeable with mine, the man who would go to hell or Philadelphia for me and for whom I would have performed the same little stunt, the man in whose eyes I could do no wrong, and the same here—well, that man and myself could never dine together. I drank and he did not.

"We have tried it. When my tongue would start to loosen up and the joints of my mind begin to crackle and thaw over the good stuff he didn't go along with me. To me his face got more and more sewed up, his line of conversation more and more stupid, his gestures more and more buttoned up as my ego began to unlimber. I'd begin to fidget; so would he. My hilarity began to wear on his dignity, and his dignity began to eat into and corrode my hilarity. By the time I had topped off my brandy and he had begun to puff his cigarette with the mechanical gestures of a man playing chess we were not really enemies, but temperamental antagonists. I could see a sneer, a mock, a contemptuous turn in all his features; while no doubt he could see the same in mine. We sat like Medusa facing Falstaff.

"It always ended the same way. I left him for another table where the thirsty birds, with or without feathers, were flocking together, and he beat it abruptly for his corner in the club library, where he could study the latest solid utterance of some hopelessly dry-bone mind in a magazine that hadn't a lead in its printer's office.

"I tell you," he concluded mournfully, throwing in a chaser of 2.75 beer served in a fancy coal scuttle, "that the drinker and the nondrinker, no matter how high their regard for one another, exist in as different worlds as—"

"Just it," cut in Dr. Rounder, the club psycho-analyst and poet emeritus of a thousand White Way cozy corners. "The drinker and the non-drinker, the souse and the teetotaller, the bonvivant and the food-and-drink Yogi live in different worlds. They can no more mix than fire and water or a Bolshevik and a bath. They are beings that differ not in degree but in kind. They exist on different planes; walk, think, talk and act in different worlds. I would go so far as to say that they live in different dimensions.

"There is," said the doctor, tossing off a very "dry" Martini, "an Alcoholic Dimension."

"Something like the Fourth Dimension, about which we read so many blurbs nowadays, maybe?" queried one of us.

"Not quite, but not so far away, either, as you may think," resumed the Doctor. "The Alcoholic Dimension is about, generally, the third-and-a-half dimension. It is a little dimension all by itself. Length, breadth and thickness are, as every high school boy knows, the elements of the three dimensional world in which we live—if we don't get filmed—and move and have our being. It is the dimension of the sane, reasonable, sober, rule-of-thumb man. The Fourth Dimension is still only a hypothesis. It is at most a brilliantly conceived negation of the third.

"Those fellows on the fourth floor of the world are said to walk right through the rest of the house without coming down any staircase as we know it. They step through walls, pass through you and me, much as we pass through a fog or sunlight. There is nothing miraculous about it, the sharps tell us; but they simply live in another sphere where the laws of matter and motion and mechanics are different from ours.

"Now, what I call the Alcoholic Dimension lies between the two—the third and the fourth. It is a dimension of the improbable, the fantastic, and Dutch courage. The man who lives in this dimension, and you all know him—"

"I Drank and He Did Not"

"We do!" yelped the Bunch.

"The man who lives in this dimension lives in the domain of the unreasonable, the absurd, the paradoxical, the seemingly uncaused, the queer, the curious. It is topsy-turvy land, with a law of sequence and a woven network of circumstance all its own. Charlie Chaplin, Fatty Arbuckle, and the rest of the actors in those movie comics that send millions of people into hysterical laughter have parodied these laws and actions.

"Our own actions—our sober, sane, three-dimensional actions—no matter how commonplace, may seem to an eye and a brain of a creature in the Fourth Dimension as ridiculous and as comic as an intoxicated man or the antics of a Charlie Chaplin seem to us. It is all a matter of perspective, physical construction, and brain visualization.

"His Whole Being Is Dithyrambic"

"Your real intoxicated men walk through the walls of Routine, step right out of their daily lives into an enchanted land where the Unforeseen meets them at every step and puts a magic day between two stupid ones. They get rid for a while of their unbearable sanity and blow caution to the winds.

"In vino veritas we have repeated mechanically for ages. There may be a deeper meaning in this saying than appears on the surface. It generally means that the intoxicated man will spill the beans, will give up, will let the cat out of the bag—in a word, will tell the truth. But there is something more than verbal meant here, as in all proverbial phrases. In the wine state—the Alcoholic Dimension—there may be a prefiguration of a still higher state of man than is attainable in his three dimensional jacket and pajamas. In vino veritas may have meant that intoxication is itself a truth of a higher order, and that the extraordinary adventures and vicissitudes of the souse are the materialization and manifestation of a subconscious personality that is profounder, deeper, and surer of itself than the prudent, cautious, reticent beings that we are when we are ourselves, as they say."

"Literally, Doctor, a submerged personality come to the bar of the world—hey?" asked the Kidder, nibbling at his parched mustache.

"Maybe," continued the Doctor. "But generally the creature who acts in the

"He Passes Through the Crash of Bottles"

Alcoholic Dimension is never brought to judgment; at the worst, he is jugged till he comes back to the regular two-by-four dimension, and then he must answer, and generally, too, he can't, because he was otherwhere—literally, out of his mind and out of his body. He was in the dimension where all laws are nearly reversed, which is worse than if they had been wholly reversed.

"Jack London, in 'John Barleycorn,' that little known book of his wherein he describes his ascent into chimeraland and his plunges into goblin town under the influence of the 'jingle,' calls this other dimension White Magic. Sir Gilbert Parker, in a book whose title I've forgotten, makes of his hero, who is an average lawyer, politician, or something akin, but anyhow as mediocre as a prohibition Congressman, rise under the influence of drink to godlike flights of eloquence; a perfect Ajax of courage; a tremendous and vital personality.

"When Watts-Dunton took the brandy bottle away from Swinburne his genius left him. Gertrude Atherton has made a novel out of it. Genius itself is a form of ecstasy, and Plato tells us that a sane poet is no poet. But when the genii no longer dominate the souls of poets they call them from the vasty deep with alcohol—Swinburne, Verlaine, Poe, Baudelaire are classic examples of this advance upon the between-state by the aid of alcoholic stimulation. It is the mezzanine floor between the third and fourth dimensions."

"Going up!" sang out one of the crowd, as he winked the waiter for a camouflaged ginger ale and whisky, which is now known as a "red rug, with yellow tassels."

"The elevator that runs to the mezzanine also has a bad habit of sometimes falling into the cellar," remarked the Doctor.

"But it does create,—that is, alcohol—a world all of itself, whether we call that world the Land of White Magic or the Land of Purple Nights. The brain of man is a kind of Aladdin's lamp; when John Barleycorn rubs it we kick adventures out of our shoes, walk on velvet and hit the trail to parts of the city where we never would have ventured in a sober state with no other Baedeker than instinct, willfulness, or somnambulistic memory. Obstacles seem to fall down at our touch as the Red Sea parted at the approach of Moses.

"The most curious thing about the whole matter is that we can watch this passing from absolute reasonableness and staid sobriety into the alcoholic dimension—actually see the man after each fresh drink pass into his super-state, which may, sure enough, soon become his stupor state.

"There's Pudgy Pullet. All of us have sat and watched the gradual transformation of his every facial muscle as highball falls on highball into his stomach. We have, literally, been present at a birth. How his eyes begin to dilate and electricize! How his features crash into a song of happiness! How his chest rises like an organ as his alcoholic ego begins to fill his arteries! How there come to him plans of the most remarkable adventures, which he works out—as we all know—into the strangest nights of our lives. His whole being is dithyrambic. But the next day he knows nothing about that. He has crossed his Lethe and got back, a glummer but not a wiser man.

"I knew a famous writer who after his second day out on an alcoholic tour of the city imagined himself to be a clever crook. He would appear before the desk Sergeant in the old Tenderloin Police Station and insist that he was a burglar and that tons—more or less—of loot could be found in his cellar. Old Sig Freud would deny that he was the inhabitant just then of another near-dimension. He would have laid his bogus confession of burglary to a subcellar wish in the psychical house of the subject which alcohol jazzed into a personality.

"Have you noticed how easy it is to get away with things when we are cornered? There is an assurance, a conviction, an audacity about the well lit-up man that carries all before him. He inspires a kind of awe.

"The drunken man's luck is proverbial. There isn't a drinker who could not narrate escapes from physical disaster while he was alcoholized that border on the miraculous. The guardian angels of the Alcoholic Dimension walk with him where traffic cops would fear to tread. He passes through the crash of bottles and the wreck of saloons like one who has a charmed life. He falls down the steps of the Washington Monument, and rises whole-skinned and cherubic faced. He walks off a wharf with a preordained certainty of falling into the featherbed of a police river patrol boat. He sometimes has his roll pinched when the janitors of his special dimension are off guard, but more often he will arrive home with more than he started with."

"Well, now that Uncle Sam has closed the Alcoholic Dimension during the Summer, what is there left for us to do?" asked the ex-All-Nighter, who had started the whole wheeze.

"Why, we'll have to worry along with the old three," replied the Doctor, "unless we can wink our way back occasionally into the merry mezzanine."

many will be able to pay a sum as large as forty or fifty billions of dollars. Even larger sums, running from a hundred billion to two hundred billion, were proposed and discussed at the Peace Conference, as they have been in the press. So far as these proposals were seriously made they rested upon a complete misunderstanding of the fundamental factors which determine a nation's ability to make foreign payments. For example, there has been much loose speculation about the "proportion of Germany's national wealth" that might be taken by way of indemnity, or of the "proportion of Germany's national income" that might be available. It seems to have been thought that the problem could be solved by imposing a heavy capital tax in Germany, or by seizing the German railways or the Junkers' estates.

Now, if the indemnity was to be merely a domestic payment, if its recipients were to expend it within Germany—if they were willing to migrate to Germany and live there on the proceeds of the German payments—methods like those suggested might conceivably suffice.

But if the payments are to be of any real service to the claimant nations they must be made in funds that are good in Paris or Brussels or Rome or London or New York. The size of the indemnity is limited by the fact that indemnity payments are foreign payments. To take German railroad earnings or land rents or paper marks as reparation payments is merely to change the form of Germany's obligation, and does not bring one a step nearer an actual and effective payment. In fact, such a course has the disadvantage that it puts upon the recipient rather than upon Germany the onerous burden of converting German domestic funds into foreign funds.

A nation has only four ways of making foreign payments: First, by exporting gold; second, by drawing upon funds already established in foreign centres; third, by borrowing in foreign centres; fourth, by selling goods or services in foreign markets. Germany's gold would cover only a very small fraction of her reparation liabilities, and to take any large part of it would so unsettle financial conditions in Germany as to lessen that country's power to make reparation payments in a degree wholly disproportionate to the amount of gold taken. Moreover, if the German paper marks now held in large quantities in France, Belgium, Poland, and in Southeastern Europe are ultimately to be redeemed, the German gold reserves must be husbanded rather than dissipated. The funds now to Germany's credit in foreign money centres (e. g., in neutral countries) are very small, and, with negligible exceptions, are already mortgaged for other purposes. Borrowing in foreign markets, even if it were feasible, would not solve the problem. It would merely replace one sort of foreign indebtedness by another.

For most of the other reparation payments, therefore, Germany must rely upon the sale of services or property in foreign markets. Here she can utilise two classes of things: First, things now existing outside of Germany or that can be easily moved outside of Germany; second, things that can be produced in Germany in the future and sold in foreign markets. The first of these two classes of things constitute Germany's cash assets, which will have to be relied upon to meet the first installments of the reparation payments. The second class of things must be relied upon as the source of the later successive annual payments upon the indemnity.

The cash assets include such items as the goods and implements taken from the invaded districts, (insofar as these goods and implements can be restored,) the German mercantile marine, the mines of the Sarre Basin and German-owned property in ceded territory, foreign securities held in Germany, German property sequestered in the allied countries, and, in fact, liquidatable German property of whatever sort in all other parts of the world, together with whatever goods are now ready or can quickly be got ready for shipment out of Germany.

Altogether an inventory of these cash assets would probably show something over seven or eight billions of dollars. But not all of them can be easily disposed of, and some (German banks and mercantile houses in foreign countries, for example) would have little value except to their former owners. In fact, allowing two years for the conversion of these cash assets, their maximum liquidatable value can hardly be set at more than five billion dollars. This is the amount which it was decided that Germany should be asked to pay during the first two years. But a considerable part of this sum will have to be utilized in financing Germany's necessary importations of food and raw materials during that period. It is doubtful whether half will be left to apply on the reparation payment—possibly the balance will be almost negligible.

Turning now to the matter of the later annual payments we find a still more difficult and uncertain problem. These payments must be made out of credits created by exporting, and these credits will be available for the purpose only in so far as they are not used up in paying for German imports. That is, after Germany's cash assets are exhausted, her only available source of further reparation payments is a favorable balance of trade.

Germany's exports reached their maximum in 1913, when they were about $2,500,000,000. Her imports were, as they usually have been, slightly larger than her exports, the difference being made up by invisible items, such as income from foreign investments and profits of mercantile shipping. To secure a favorable balance of trade Germany must export more (in value) than she did before the war or import less.

If Germany were to continue upon substantially a war basis, so far as her economic life is concerned, a large surplus product available for export could be secured. The productive energy which has gone during the war into the maintenance of her armies might conceivably be devoted to production for export. Restrictions upon unnecessary consumption and upon unnecessary imports, together with a rigid Governmental control of industries, so arranged as to give priorities to production for export, would make possible a large exportable surplus amounting to as much as several times the pre-war figure.

But there are two sorts of obstacles in the way. In the first place, there are limits to the length to which the German Government could go in virtually commandeering labor and capital for export industries without arousing a dangerous degree of dissatisfaction and discontent on the part of the German people. In the second place, there is the problem of foreign markets. Germany has lost much in the good-will of the world's markets; a large part of her distributing and selling mechanism (banks, commercial houses, &c.) has been lost, and still more is likely to be swept away in the process of liquidation of her cash assets; her former trade outlets in Eastern Europe are likely for some years to have but little purchasing power. Even allowing for the increase in price level, it is doubtful whether Germany, with territory and population as well as markets diminished, can soon regain the volume of export trade she had before the war. And since Germany depends very largely upon imported raw materials for her export industries, it will be particularly difficult for her to obtain a favorable trade balance of any considerable size.

Of course the problem would be greatly simplified if the victorious powers should encourage German commercial competition in neutral countries and should grant preferences to German trade within their own borders. But in view of the real injury that this might do to established industrial interests, and in view, particularly, of the false notions now widely current respecting the supposed harmful effect of large imports upon a nation's general economic welfare, it is, of course, quite impossible that the victorious countries will want to maximize the indemnity by giving a helping hand to German trade. In short, the only way in which the claimant nations can be reasonably sure of a large indemnity is by permitting the German people to work for them. This they are unwilling to do, lest German gooda should supplant the products of their own labor. Raw materials, of course, they are willing to take from Germany, but aside from coal and potash Germany has little of them to export.

For example, the simplest way of securing indemnity payments would be to assign contracts for reconstruction work in the devastated regions to German firms utilizing German labor. But this is hardly to be expected from countries that are now facing imminent unemployment problems of their own. It was strongly urged, however, at Paris that Germany should be required to furnish a large number of laborers to do reconstruction work under French and Belgian direction. This plan, undesirable from many points of view, was happily not adopted.

Relying, then, only upon shipments of coal and potash and exports of the usual sorts of manufactured goods, a trade balance of half a billion dollars a year is likely to be about as much as Germany can be expected to achieve in the near future. So the treaty provides that, in addition to the cash payments already described, and in addition to the repayment by 1926 of Belgium's war loans, (some $700,000,000,) Germany is to deliver gold-bearer bonds for $10,000,000,000, on which interest runs at 2½ per cent. for five years, beginning in 1921, and thereafter at 5 per cent. plus an additional 1 per cent. for amortization. Thus the annual payments will be $250,000,000 for five years and thereafter $600,000,000.

When satisfied that Germany can meet an increased obligation the Permanent Reparations Commission is to require a second issue of $10,000,000,000 in 5 per cent. bonds, and further issues up to the amount of the blank check that Germany has virtually signed by agreeing to make reparation for all losses of specified kinds may ultimately be required. At present, however, there is the specific obligation of an aggregate payment which is likely to be, in terms of present worth, somewhere between twenty and twenty-five billions of dollars.

Why, then, did the Germans offer to pay the definite sum of twenty-five billions, according to the reports of the negotiations at Versailles? Simply because, first, they preferred a definite obligation to a blank check, and, second, because this twenty-five billion was to be the aggregate sum of all their payments, and not merely their present worth. The present value of the obligation the Germans preferred to assume would depend upon the number of years through which the payments were distributed and upon the interest rate assumed in the calculations. Under any practicable scheme of payment, however, the present or capital value of the twenty-five billions of dollars in future installments could hardly be more than twelve or fifteen billions. That is, the German offer seems to have been roughly equivalent to the specific minimum obligation imposed by the treaty, but was correspondingly less than the amount Germany will be called upon to pay if a second or third ten-billion-dollar bond issue is finally demanded.

This difference between present and future values is one of the reasons that Germany was not required to assume a much heavier obligation, spreading it over a longer term of years. There were those at Paris who would have been glad to see Germany obligated to make heavy annual payments during a period of a hundred years. But aside from the injustice of penalizing future generations for the misdeeds of the present generation, there was the practical obstacle that relatively little could have been added in this way to the present value of the indemnity. A payment of a billion dollars fifty years from now discounted at 5 per cent. interest compounded annually has a present worth of only about eighty-five billion. That is, it would take a payment of nearly twelve billion fifty years from now to add one billion to the present value of the indemnity. The Reparations Commission at Paris wisely decided to base its estimates on a period of payment of not more than thirty years.

All in all, the reparation terms embodied in the treaty represent a wise settlement of a very difficult problem. They involve hardship to Germany but no injustice. In fact, only from the point of view of wisdom and practicability and not of justice can their real leniency be defended. The American representatives on the Reparations Commission—Messrs. Vance McCormick, B. M. Baruch, Norman Davis, T. W. Lamont, and J. F. Dulles—deserve much of the credit for the wisdom of the final settlement.

An Engineer School for the Army

Plans Completed for Educational Institution at Camp Humphreys Which Will Put Technical and Vocational Training Within Reach of Nation's Young Manhood

Model of New Schools and Park Planned for Camp at Humphreys, Va.

By MARK DANIELS,
Captain of Engineers, U. S. Army.

THE art of passing the buck is not the exclusive prerogative of the army. Nor yet has Congress, despite its acknowledged proclivity, any monopoly thereof. The original, arm-and-hammer brand, all wool and a yard wide transmitter of the buck is the dear people themselves.

In years past the army was the object of much criticism by those who said that the people of the United States would rise up with pitchforks and drive the invader from the land. Little or nothing good could be said of the army without firing the proponents of the pitchfork theory of preparedness to tirades of criticism, so the adherents of sounder theories settled down to passive silence. Without the support of a majority of their constituents Congress would do nothing in the way of appropriations for the development and organization of a thoroughly trained, educated, and efficient army, and so the buck was passed to the War Department, which was left to get along as best it could on what was given it. Who but the people passed the buck?

Even the omnipotent Jove had to submit to a blow on the head from Vulcan's hammer before Minerva could spring, full panoplied, from his brain. By the same token it has taken a world war to knock the pitchforkers' contentions into a cocked hat and give birth to the dream of a new army.

And yet the educational and vocational features of army training which have met with such nation-wide approval are no newer than prohibition. For years the army has been giving courses in educational and vocational training. In 1901 the Engineer Corps began such courses at Willets Point. Since that time the corps has been endeavoring to secure the support of the people and Congress in the expansion of these schools, but the people passed the buck to Congress and Congress passed it along to the War Department, sans appropriation. Now the whole question of army reorganization is up before Congress, and with it the question of an extensive plan for educating and training the soldier to the end that he may become a better citizen, fitted to earn a livlihood when he is discharged.

During the war Major Gen. William Black, Chief of Engineers, established at Camp A. A. Humphreys, Virginia, a series of schools for the training of soldiers in the mechanical trades. In these schools courses were given in surveying, drafting, freehand drawing, machine and electrical shop work, masonry, carpentering, rigging, bridge building, printing, stenography, forestry and logging, railway operation and construction, road and highway construction, sanitation, and water supply.

These schools soon became the pride of the corps and the ambition of the men. When the war ended they were in full operation, though housed in temporary buildings. Equipment, such as locomotives, cranes, hoists, derricks, printing presses, lathes, shop machines of all kinds, searchlight apparatus and a great deal of other equipment for the training of students in trades was on hand, equipment such as could be found in no other educational institution in the country. If the work of educational and vocational training such as was started at Willets Point was ever to be put into operation on an effective scale, now was the time. When, therefore, educational and vocational training was established as a permanent policy in the army, Secretary Baker instructed that plans be prepared for a permanent school and post at Camp Humphreys, where trades could be taught, using the equipment at hand. From these orders were developed the new engineer school and post and college of military research, plans and specifications for which are now in the hands of the Secretary of War.

Only a brief of the conditions and facts which resulted in the adoption of these plans can be given here. Much was learned in the A. E. F. which demanded changes in the army's methods of training. The need of introducing new features was demonstrated, and all these were taken into consideration when the plans were drawn. The plans, as finally adopted, comprised four principal units, or groups—the engineer school, the college of military research, the engineer post, and the vocational schools.

The engineer school is planned to accommodate the officers of three branches of the service—the officers of the regular army in the engineer corps who must take post-graduate training, commissioned line officers of other combatant branches of the service, and commissioned officers of the reserve and National Guard who may be called into the service from time to time for engineer training.

It has been found that commissioned officers are in as much need of training after being graduated from West Point as are the enlisted men of vocational training. Officers of the Engineer Corps are placed in charge of such public work as rivers and harbors, lighthouse construction and the like, and in justice to the people who pay the bills they should be given the best of training, for it is on their say so that comparatively huge sums of money are expended. Line officers of other combatant branches of the service must receive training in such branches of engineering work as roads, bridges, sanitation and water supply, and the engineer school is the logical place for them to get such training.

In order that an adequate number of reserve and National Guard officers, trained in engineering subjects, may be maintained it is necessary that a certain number be trained each year, for the extravagance of training a great number of men in a short time has recently been made very apparent. The engineer school, then, will be devoted to the training of regular engineer officers, line officers of other combatant branches of the service, and reserve and National Guard officers. These officers will in turn be used to train others and to direct the training of enlisted men.

The Board of National Defense performed certain functions which soon demonstrated the advisability of adopting them permanently. The Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War therefore instructed that plans be drawn for a college of military research, to be an incorporated factor in the plans of the new post. It is proposed that the work in this college will not be confined solely to scientific research in subjects military, but that close contact will be maintained with all conditions of manufacture to the end that at all times the War Department will be thoroughly posted as to the conditions of manufacture and abreast the industrial conditions of the country. The need of such an institution is so apparent as to need little argument in its behalf.

The functions of an engineer officer are twofold in character, one strictly military, the other strictly engineering. In order that he may get the experience with troops that is essential to the practical application of the theories that he has learned in the Academy, there must be troops for him to work with. This necessitates the establishment of a post for enlisted men, and, in order that these men may be equally benefited, they must have permanent quarters where they can be housed for a period long enough to take a thorough course in vocational and educational training.

The plans contemplate the accommodation of two regiments, about thirty-five hundred men and officers, one a regiment of sappers and the other a regiment made up of special detachments of engineer troops.

Group four comprises twelve buildings that will be devoted exclusively to the educational and vocational training of the enlisted men. The schedule of studies and military training for these men is now being worked out. It has been suggested that the mornings be devoted to physical exercise and military drill and the afternoons to educational and vocational training. This schedule will probably be adopted. The evenings will be devoted to study and personal occupations of the men. In these schools will be taught the following subjects: Civil, mechanical, electrical engineering, hydraulics, sanitation, forestry, railway construction and operation, mining, quarrying, crane operation, camouflage, stevedoring, searchlight construction and operation, bridge design and construction, stenography, rigging, surveying, drafting and freehand drawing, printing, plumbing, masonry, lithography, English, civil government, and history.

Such are the plans of the Secretary of War for the establishment of a great school for the education and training along technical lines of the officers and men of the army. The crying need for such an institution has been disputed by no one. The success which has crowned the efforts of the General Staff of the A. E. F. in this direction has created an insistent demand for the establishment of similar training along broader lines in this country. Inquiries are reaching the department requesting information and assurance that such a policy is not a dream that is too good to be true. Mothers of young men who cannot afford such an education as will be offered in the army are inquiring as to the methods of enlistment.

The buck has been passed. It has been dropped into the army hopper and has brought out the plans for the new engineer school and post at Camp A. A. Humphreys. The War Department has done its work and, in the opinion of those who have investigated these plans, has done it well. The plans have been submitted to the committees of Congress. The department has gone as far as it can in the matter. It is now up to Congress to decide whether the army shall establish this non-sectional educational institution that shall be open to every young man in the country who wants a technical education and is willing to give in return a part of his time to the Government in military drill and physical training. For the sake of our country, the quality of citizenship in it, and its growing manhood, let us hope that Congress will provide for the permanent establishment of these schools.

Madcap Castles of King Ludwig

Question of the Ownership of the Three Magnificent Palaces Built by the Late Insane Bavarian Monarch

NEWS comes from Bavaria that the new Government there is negotiating with the ex-King Ludwig III., now living as an exile in Switzerland, for a legal settlement on the State of his landed property in Bavaria. If this is so, it doubtless involves the most gorgeous trio of palaces built by any European monarch in modern times. These structures were well known to tourists before the war; in fact, so large and sumptuous are they, so hopelessly beyond the modest needs of the Bavarian royal family did they prove, that for a long time their only use was to provide a little revenue through the fees charged to the thousands of visitors who passed yearly through their spacious halls.

The palaces in question are Neuschwanstein, Linderhof, and Herrenchiemsee, all three built by the "mad King" Ludwig II. of Bavaria, who reigned from 1864 to his tragic death in 1886, and cost Bavaria such huge sums by his extravagance that he was finally deposed and locked up as incurably insane.

During the time that Ludwig was pouring out his own and the State's funds in rebuilding old castles and building the new ones that were to make his name a synonym for extravagance, he was bound in intimate friendship with Richard Wagner, the famous composer. The signs of this friendship may be seen in one of the castles, Neuschwanstein, where there are many paintings of scenes from the legends upon which Wagner based his world-famous operas. Upon Wagner, too, Ludwig lavished money. He had special performances of the composer's operas given in Munich at vast expense, at which no spectator was present but himself. In his thirst for realistic detail, he caused real water to be poured upon the stage when the stage directions called for rainstorm, to the acute discomfort of the singers, who were forced to grin and bear it on account of the deference due to the royal audience of one. When the authorities of Munich would not acquiesce in Ludwig's plan to have a great theatre built at Munich for Wagner's operas, the composer turned to Baireuth, hence the rise of that obscure town to fame as the great Wagner shrine. For many years it was the only place in the world where the master's last work, "Parsifal," could be given until Heinrich Conried and Henry W. Savage brought it to the United States.

Of the three great palaces which may revert to the Bavarian State as a result of the negotiations between the exiled Bavarian King and the Government which overthrew him, the most remarkable, both in location and architecture, is Neuschwanstein. It is about eighty-five miles south of Munich, in the Bavarian Highlands, three miles from the quaint old town of Füssen, and close to the old castle of Hohenschwangau, which originally belonged to the house of Guelph and was purchased in 1667 by the Dukes of Bavaria. Hohenschwangau was the favorite residence of the mad King Ludwig, but, tiring of staying long in one place, he conceived the idea of building another castle-palace, in the manner of the Kings of the Middle Ages. His eye fell upon a precipitous crag close to Hohenschwangau, and there, between 1869 and 1886, arose the splendid palace which ranks as the greatest of all the many monuments to Ludwig's building mania. Its name, Neuschwanstein, is due to the fact that the nearby castle of Hohenschwangau was formerly called Schwanstein.

Ludwig set three of the best-known Bavarian architects—Dollman, Riedel, and Hoffman—to work on this creation of his wild fancy, and they reared for him a grand structure in the Romanesque style, planned somewhat after the style of the Wartburg. Here the influence of Wagner on the King may be traced, for the Wartburg, in Thuringia, is where Tannhäuser and other singers meet, in the Wagnerian opera of that name, to compete for the Landgrave's prize.

Neuschwanstein, however, was built on a much larger and more magnificent scale than the Wartburg. It is splendidly fitted up throughout, and from its windows there are surpassingly beautiful views of the Hohenschwangau, the Alp-See, a little lake far below, and the wild gorge of the Pöllat.

Visitors ascend to the showrooms, which are on the third floor, by means of a stairway in the main tower, which juts up to a height of nearly 200 feet. The Wagnerian leanings, which were so important a part of King Ludwig's life, are evidenced again by a series of frescoes, showing scenes from the life of Siegfried, Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, and Parsifal, and from the lives of those two familiar figures in the "Meistersinger," Hans Sachs and Walter von der Vogelweide, which adorn the magnificent apartments of the third floor. In the Gothic bedchamber, Wagner again comes to the fore, for it is adorned with scenes from the story of "Tristan and Isolde." Some of Bavaria's foremost artists, including Piloty, contributed these paintings to the scheme of decoration of Neuschwanstein.

Linderhof, another of Ludwig's fantastic palaces, is some seventy miles from Munich. Like Neuschwanstein, it also is in the Bavarian Highlands, seven miles from the famous town of Oberammergau, renowned all over the world for its Passion Play. Linderhof is in the rococo style, and was built between 1869 and 1878, when Ludwig was at the height of his wild career of money-spending. Its principal feature is the beautiful gardens that surround it, which attract large numbers of tourists who combine a trip to the castle with a visit to Oberammergau.

In these gardens is a bronze equestrian statue of Louis XIV. of France, evidence of the mad Bavarian monarch's hallucination that there was something in common between him and the great French ruler. This crops up again in the decorations of the interior of the palace, which include a series of portraits of French celebrities of the time of Louis XIV. and his successor, Louis XV. Ludwig did not forget a statue of himself, which is one of the adornments of the gardens of Linderhof. Another object of interest is an artificial grotto, with a small lake and waterfall, which visitors may have illuminated with electric light, provided, however, that they number at least ten, or, if fewer, pay for as many as ten tickets—a good instance of the frugality which ruled in Bavaria following Ludwig II.'s career of extravagance.

Linderhof's gardens also boast a kiosk, in the Moorish style, with stalactite vaultings and some enameled bronze peacocks.

The third of the series of Ludwig II.'s "follies" is Herrenchiemsee, an imitation of the great palace of Versailles, situated on an island in the Chiemsee, a small lake fifty-seven miles southeast of Munich. Dollman and Hoffman, two of the architects who built Neuschwanstein, (the former also did Linderhof,) were engaged by Ludwig to design Herrenchiemsee. They worked on it between 1878 and 1885, but left it uncompleted, as by that time the Bavarians had had enough of the King's wild ways and were getting ready to lock him up.

Herrenchiemsee is built on three sides of a square, in which are fine fountains —without water, though, for many years. In the vestibule is a beautiful group of enameled peacocks—these birds were great favorites with Ludwig. From the vestibule opens a court paved with marble, on the right of which is a staircase splendidly adorned with marble, stucco and paintings.

Ludwig's belief that he was another Louis XIV. is shown in the names of the great apartments of Herrenchiemsee, which are French. There are the Salle des Gardes, Première Ante-Chambre, Salon de l'Oeil de Boeuf, and the sumptuous Chambre de Parade, decorated in purple and gold, with a fine gilded bed. The Galerie des Glaces, 245 feet long, is illuminated with thirty-five lustres and thirty-two candelabra, having a total of 2,500 candles. There are also the Salles de Guerre et de la Paix, (Halls of War and Peace,) and, in the north wing, a royal bedchamber, study and sitting room, for the use of the mad King, together with other lavishly decorated apartments.

The mad King never really enjoyed any of his palaces. His malady grew upon him from year to year, and he spent much of his time restlessly wandering from one palace to another, indulging in wild night rides without definite aim, craving solitude.

As early as 1880, sixteen years after his accession to the throne, Ludwig's extravagance had brought financial ruin upon him, and it became apparent that something had to be done to check his follies. On the 8th of June, 1886, he was adjudged insane.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

ADMIRAL VON TIRPITZ has written his "Memoirs" in two large volumes and Dodd, Mead & Co. will publish the work in this country some time during the coming Fall. The latter part of the book is said to be in the nature of a defense of his own part in the war, but the greater part of it has been in preparation for a number of years and contains a great deal of inside information about Germany which will now see the light for the first time in this country. The author is said to be emphatic and ample in his scoring of the ex-Kaiser for the bringing on of the war. Because of the frank revelations of the book certain powers in Germany have endeavored to prevent its publication.

Another novel by Johan Bojer, whose "The Great Hunger" was brought out in the United States last Winter by Moffat, Yard & Co., is promised for November publication by that firm. Its title is "The Face of the World," and its theme is the new movement in revolutionary democracy. Dr. Bojer will visit this country for the first time in the Autumn and will lecture on Norwegian literature in a number of colleges.

A new publishing house, Harcourt, Brace & Howe, has just been established in New York City, and will engage in a general and textbook publishing business, with its offices at 1 West Forty-seventh Street. Alfred Harcourt, the President of the new firm, is already well known to authors and publishers in both the United States and England through his long connection with Henry Holt & Co., of which firm he has been Secretary. Donald C. Brace, the Treasurer, was also connected with the Holts, where he was manager of the production department and a director of the company. Will D. Howe, the Secretary, has been for some years the head of the Department of English at Indiana University and is author or joint author of a number of widely used textbooks. He has also had supervisory charge of several series of books published by leading houses. Harcourt, Brace & Howe will presently announce their first list of twenty or more titles.

The Century Company announces that it has been threatened by the United States Government with an injunction to restrain it from further printing and distributing of Thomas F. Millard's "Democracy and the Eastern Question," which it published a month or so ago. Mr. Millard is the owner and editor of a periodical published in China, where he has lived for several years. In his book he considers the present economic and political condition of China, especially with reference to Japan, which, he thinks, is not to be trusted and intends to take possession of China. It appears that Mr. Millard is believed to have revealed private and confidential matters whose publication is embarrassing to the Government.

Miss Kathleen Burke of the Scottish Women's Hospitals, whose name is well known on this side the Atlantic because of her capable work for the hospitals, has engaged to write a series of four books for Doubleday, Page & Co. dealing respectively with the sufferings and the heroisms during the war of the children of Great Britain, France, Belgium, and Serbia. Miss Burke recently sailed from Montreal for Europe and expects to have the first of the volumes ready within a short time.

A new story by Eden Phillpotts, with an unaccustomed note of humor in its narrative, is announced for publication the latter part of August by the Macmillan Company. It is called "A Storm in a Teacup," and it tells the story of a young wife who tires of her husband because he is commonplace, runs away with a man of high intellectual quality, discovers he is a prosaic bore in daily life, and finally is glad to return to her husband. The story will be another of the series in which Mr. Phillpotts makes a picture of present-day industrial conditions in England, his background in this case being the paper-making industry.

William Roscoe Thayer has written "An Intimate Biography of Theodore Roosevelt," which Houghton Mifflin Company will publish the 1st of October. Mr. Thayer was a college mate and lifelong friend of Mr. Roosevelt, and, therefore, has brought to the writing of the book a remarkable intimacy of knowledge and understanding, while his technical qualifications as a writer of biography have been amply proved by his biographies of Cavour and John Hay.

Vernon Kellogg, who was perhaps Herbert Hoover's most important co-worker in the relief of Belgium and in other works of mercy in Europe, has written a book which tells the story of the various American missions of helpfulness to Europe. It makes the first authoritative and permanent statement of the responsibilities which America assumed on the other side of the Atlantic and of the position which the country made for itself in the minds and hearts of the nations of Europe. It will be called "America on Mission," and it will be published shortly by Houghton Mifflin Company.

Harper & Brothers will shortly publish "From the Life," by Harvey O'Higgins, a series of imaginary biographical portraits which have won much attention, as they have had serial magazine publication.

Little, Brown & Co. announce two novels for Aug. 14, "Burned Bridges," another story of the Canadian Northwest by Bertrand W. Sinclair, and "The Owner of the Lazy D," by William Patterson White.

A new life of Walt Whitman is announced for Fall publication by Doubleday, Page & Co. It has been written by the French scholar and author, Leon Bazalgette, and its title will be "Walt Whitman—The Man and the Artist." Most American readers do not know how great was the appeal Whitman made to Frenchmen nor how important was his influence upon the young writers of France who came to maturity in the latter part of the last century and the early part of the present, but to those who do know something about his influence in France it will seem most appropriate that he should have a French biographer.

For September publication Henry Holt & Co. announce a work by the two distinguished psychologists, Clarence S. Yoakum and Robert M. Yerkes, on "Army Mental Tests," which will give a full account of the methods, their genesis, object, and application, which were used in the training camps to enable the army to find the right men for the places where they were needed. It is a practical book not only for psychologists and educators but for all employers of labor and for all who are in any manner interested in this new development of the testing of men. The work is authorized by the War Department.

BEST SHORT STORIES

HOW TO STUDY "THE BEST SHORT STORIES." By Blanche Colton Williams. Small, Maynard & Co.

Dr. Williams's volume is, it is stated, intended to be of use to the student of short stories. It consists of a short preface, in which the author, herself an instructor in short-story writing, declares it to be her belief that "one can 'learn to write,'" and analyses of the short stories contained in those volumes edited by Mr. O'Brien, and by him pronounced to be the best of each year. Many of these analyses also contain questions for the student, such as: "Was it fate, chance or tactics of hate which caused the cat to drop the snakehead?" and others like: "What is the denouement?" and "How much creative work must you accomplish to make a consistent character of Stiles?" Of these two latter, the first would certainly seem to imply either that the author was hopelessly obscure or the reader mentally deficient, while the student who could perfectly answer the second would scarcely be in need of any great amount of instruction.

What George Creel Found in Ireland

Never was there a story so dramatic—so heroic—as the tale of Ireland's struggle for home rule. Never has it been told so brilliantly as in this remarkable book.

IRELAND'S FIGHT FOR FREEDOM
By George Creel

Frank P. Walsh says:

"Every American with Irish blood in his veins should read George Creel's book. All Americans who want the truth about Ireland should read the book. It is written as only George Creel can write when he writes from his heart. No more unanswerable argument against English rule in Ireland was ever made; no clearer, finer presentation of the Irish cause was ever framed. The book is worth an army to Ireland."

GENIUS AGAIN A NOVELIST'S THEME

Samuel Merwin's Study of Henry Calverley in "The Passionate Pilgrim"—Israel Zangwill's Delightful Story of Victorian England and Other Current Works of Fiction

JINNY THE CARRIER. By Israel Zangwill. The Macmillan Company.

DURING some twenty-odd years Mr. Zangwill has abstained from the writing of novels. Now, however, he comes forward with a tale two or three times as long as the ordinary novel, a tale he describes in two ways that are not contradictory since they dovetail neatly into each other. First he tells us that in writing "Jinny the Carrier" he meant to fill the need for a "bland" book—a bland book being defined as "one to be read when in bed with a sore throat"—and later goes on to explain his desire "to seize the essence of Essex," a desire which accounts for the "slowness and minuteness" of his method, though even this extreme slowness and minuteness are "immeasurable velocity and breadth compared with the scale of reality." For the period of the story is laid far back in those now distant seeming years when Victoria was still the young Queen, when the great Exhibition was the talk of London, and the old-fashioned stage coaches were being superseded by the new-fangled railroads. Little Bradmarsh, the tiny village on the Brad, which is the scene of the story, though actually only a short distance from London, is in spirit scarcely less than a thousand miles away; to the dwellers on its more or less isolated farms the Tuesday and Friday visits of the carrier's cart are episodes of great importance, and the coming of a letter an earth-shaking event, to be discussed and considered and treated without undue haste—especially as many of the older people could not read writing or even print.

It is the arrival of a letter which opens the story. It came to Frog Farm one beautiful April morning when "the whole world seemed like a child tiptoeing toward some delightful future," and told Caleb and Martha Flynt that their son Will, youngest of their eleven boys, was on his way home. He had been to the United States and to Canada, and though he had not made a fortune, he was fairly well-to-do according to the standards of Little Bradmarsh, where laborers would have been able to live decently on ten shillings a week—had they been able to get them. Will had also acquired certain ideas on the subject of open windows which were a trial to his father and mother, who liked their rooms hermetically sealed, and manifested a strange objection to drinking the water scooped from beneath the green slime of the pond. But on certain matters he was rigidly conservative, and it was this conservatism which caused him to clash with Jinny the Carrier. Jinny's parents were dead and she lived with her old grandfather, who had been the village carrier, as his father was before him. At first he had taken her about with him because she was too little to leave at home; then she began to help him, and so by slow degrees, so very slow that the outcome was no shock even to the staid folk of Little Bradmarsh, she took over the work he was no longer able to do. But that "a female" should be a carrier seemed highly indecorous, if not grossly improper, to Will; Jinny's lively tongue annoyed him so much he called her "a minx," and thus these two entered on the long duel which could have only one ending.

Jinny is a charming heroine, but her love story is only an excuse for a detailed picture of life in this particular section of rural England during the middle of the nineteenth century. A great diversity of creeds flourished in Essex, and though the inhabitants of Little Bradmarsh were not many, there were among them Wesleyans and Baptists and "Peculiars," as well as a few adherents of the Church of England, while Martha Flynt possessed the distinction of being the only "Christadelphian" in the place, her husband remaining a "Peculiar," even while regarding the New Jerusalem, which, according to her creed, was soon to descend upon earth, "with a certain proprietary interest." The very leisurely method of the narrator gives time and scope for acquainting the reader with the ideas and beliefs of all the characters as well as with the small details of their daily lives. We go with Jinny on her rounds, and accompany her to the Chipstone cattle market, on that momentous occasion when she was intrusted with the buying of a horse for Anthony Flippance, otherwise known as Tony Flip, the genial marionette showman who had once been a manager and was never able to conquer his desire to return to the legitimate stage. With her we go into the great kitchen of "The Black Sheep" and listen to the trials of "Mother Gander," the landlady. And because of Jinny we are told a romance of a yet earlier day, a day when the smugglers had their haunts all along the coast; and were indulgently regarded by all save the members of the Revenue Service. A very efficient young person, too, was this Jinny, quick-witted and warm-hearted, swift at repartee, always ready with a smile and a jest, courageous and devoted and loyal, driving fearlessly along the lonely roads in the tilt cart drawn by Methusalem, the old white horse, with her dog Nip dashing about, and at her belt the little horn she blew so cheerily, even in those dark days when her rival was getting all the business, and the little cart was well-nigh empty. She was popular with almost every one except Bundock, the local postman, who considered her an interloper on whom it was impossible to look with the favor he accorded the majority of her sex. Bundock, with his puns and his philanderings and his pride of place, is a very amusing person, but then there are a good many amusing persons and episodes in the book. The account of Will's attempt to compose a letter perfect in style and grammar and spelling with only the Bible to serve him as a guide through the snares of orthography and composition, is very funny, and scarcely less amusing are Jinny's struggles with the "Universal Spelling Book," an extraordinary volume published in 1755, while the denouement of the story, when old Gran'fer Quarles settles the lovers' difficulties by his energetic and totally unexpected behavior, is both entertaining and surprising. Mr. Zangwill has wisely confined himself to indicating the Essex dialect instead of striving to reproduce it, and has unearthed many delightfully quaint old words and phrases. The dialogue is racy and characteristic, and many of the descriptions have the quiet freshness and charm of the English countryside. The novel is not one to read in a hurry, but only when one has plenty of time at one's disposal. It is a leisurely, full-flavored narrative of lives in which "nothing happened too suddenly," lives of honest, hard-working, slow-witted, obstinate folk, living close to the earth, sharing the placidity of the fields they tended, yet capable of a stubborn bravery, lives not untouched by romance, and lightened here and there with a gleam of spiritual beauty.

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM. By Samuel Merwin. Illustrated. The Bobbs-Merrill Company.

WHEN a novelist wishes to try his hand at the distinctly difficult task of portraying a genius, he usually follows one or the other of two very different models. He either chooses the strong, rough, ruthless type, with no consideration for anything or anybody, whose only morality is complete devotion to his art, or else, and more frequently, he draws the sensitive, dependent, unworldly idealist and dreamer, a veritable child in all his dealings with the social order, and a good deal of a weakling, though, perhaps, capable at times of acting with a considerable amount of vigor. Mr. Somerset Maugham has lately given us an admirable study of the first in his notably brilliant novel "The Moon and Sixpence," and now Mr. Samuel Merwin presents one of the second in his new story entitled "The Passionate Pilgrim." Mr. Merwin's hero is that Henry Calverly concerning whom he has already

MR. CREEL'S VIEWS ON MATTERS CONNECTED WITH IRELAND'S FIGHT FOR FREEDOM

IRELAND'S FIGHT FOR FREEDOM. By George Creel. Harper & Brothers.

By EVERETT P. WHEELER

THE title of this book is a misnomer. It should be "Ireland's Fight For Independence." It is admirably adapted to defeat the object it was designed to accomplish. If there ever was a question for the solution of which good temper, fairness, and mutual understanding were necessary, it is the Irish question. This book contains a violent attack upon the English Government, dilating vehemently upon all the ill it has done to Ireland during eight centuries, and omitting entirely any reference to the good. Laws which oppressed the Roman Catholics and deprived them of most civil rights are condemned. No mention is made of the fact that many of these laws applied to England as well as to Ireland. No mention is made of Catholic emancipation, and of the fact that for ninety years the Roman Catholics in Ireland in all civil rights have stood on the same plane with their Protestant brethren. The old navigation laws, the tariff taxes, which were once imposed in England upon the import of Irish goods, are condemned. No reference is made to the fact that for seventy years and more no such taxes have been laid, and Ireland has been under the same free trade system as England herself. It is much as if a history of the black race in America were to be written, and the author should dwell upon the horrors of the slave trade, and the cruelties of the Slave Code, and omit altogether the Proclamation of Emancipation and the Thirteenth Amendment.

The absentee landlords are denounced, but no mention is made of the many landowners who were not absentees, as, for example, the Edgeworths, whose relations with their Irish neighbors were most friendly and in every way helpful. Nor does the book refer to the land acts of 1870, 1887, and especially the Land Purchase act of 1903, "creating a commission to buy estates from landlords and sell them to tenants, thus creating a peasant proprietary, and to assist the tenants by means of a Government loan." These bills have been put into effect and over £83,000,000 have been advanced from the British Exchequer to the great advantage of Ireland.

This one-sided method leads the author into amusing contradictions of which he seems quite unconscious. He says on one page that the industries of Ireland are crushed by British legislation, and on another that the trade of Ireland in 1915 amounted to $862,000,000. His chapter, "Can Ireland Stand Alone?" is a graphic description of the ability and success of the Irish people, yet on another page he describes the country as "destroyed, depopulated, and impoverished." On the very last page she is kept "in the pit." On one page he declares that as a result of one of the invasions, 300 years ago, the people of Ireland were killed off, men, women, and children, and he has a shocking story of dead bodies lying by the roadside, with not a single person visible in whole counties; yet he admits on another that there are still 4,500,000 persons in Ireland, and declares that in the United States there are 15,000,000 descendants of Irishmen.

In order still further to give bitterness to his indictment he brings in the war of the Revolution, and goes so far as to say that half of the soldiers who fought on the American side in that war were Irishmen, and that the colonies would have been subjugated had it not been for them. From this the truth of his version of Irish history may fairly be judged. He justly praises the bravery of the Irishmen who fought on the Union side in the civil war, but omits to state that Irishmen in the Confederate ranks were equally brave. We gladly honor the heroes of that race, who have shown undaunted courage in every continent. Curiously enough, although whenever the Irish get into another country they are brave, wise, and successful, they have never carried on a successful revolution in their own. The revolution which they attempted as recently as 1916 is thus described by the author: "Easter Sunday, April 23, was the day set for the rebellion, but, as always in the past, plans went awry, and the old tragedy of blunders, cross-purposes, and counterorders was played out to the bitter end." Does not this prove that in the various Irish insurrections the wisest and most skillful Irishmen have taken no part?

Another curious failure to look at his subject on both sides is to be found in Mr. Creel's bitter invective against the Ulster leaders, Sir Edward Carson and the rest, who, before the late war, declared that they would not submit to an act of Parliament which separated them from Great Britain, and would insist by force of arms, if necessary, upon remaining as they were. This he condemns in unmeasured terms; calls Carson and his associates rebels and traitors; yet this is precisely what he is urging the people of the other three Irish provinces to do; what he praises them for having done in the past. All this is as timely and reasonable as if he were to circulate among the negroes who have been rioting in Chicago and Washington, a highly colored statement of the cruelties that have been practiced upon their race, beginning with the slave trade. He cannot deny that all the grievances which a century ago and more embittered the Irish against the English and the English against the Irish, have been redressed except the absence of home rule. When he speaks of "taxation without representation" he omits to mention that the taxes upon Ireland have been imposed by a Parliament in which Ireland had much more than a proportionate representation, according to population, and that at times, not infrequent, the Irish members had the balance of power. He ignores the fact that in the British Parliament the majority of the House of Commons determines the fate of the administration. The Premier has no permanent tenure, and repeatedly the votes of the Irish members have determined his selection. Any one familiar with the history of Parliament for the last fifty years must recognize how great the influence of these members has been.

Another curious inconsistency is in the fact that Mr. Creel claims self-determination for the people of the whole island, and yet refuses it to the people of the province of Ulster. Except for a very brief period under the exigencies of the Danish invasion, this province of Ulster was never united under one Government with the rest of Ireland until it became united under the British rule. It is certainly just as much entitled to a choice as to whether or not it will remain under the existing written two books. Henry is about 27 in the year 1903, which is the date of the story. At 21 he had become famous, when his first book, a volume of short stories, was published and instantly accepted as a remarkable performance, a volume containing "the finest short story in the language." Then came one of those tragedies which are spread all over the front page of the newspaper, a tragedy which culminated in the death of Cicely, Henry's girl wife, and Henry's own conviction to serve six months in the State Penitentiary for an act which, though rash and technically illegal, was one with which most people would sympathize. After his release he succeeded in evading the reporters and dropping out of sight for some four years. It is with his appearance in the office of The News, a paper published in a city somewhere in the Middle West, that the excessively long book opens.

Dreading the very thought of recognition, Henry has taken the name of "Hugh Stafford," under which he has already published a novel of no importance. His terrible suffering has left him in poor health, both physically and mentally, and indeed his brain seems so very much beforgged that one cannot but wonder how he managed to get along during the years which elapsed between his release and his arrival at the office of The News. However, he gradually emerges from his dazed condition, and it is of the experiences and influences which enable him to do this that the story tells. Among these influences are certain forces of corrupt "Big Business," and equally corrupt politics. In the second chapter one encounters a passing mention of the Mayor, Tim MacIntyre, of "County Railways" and the Cantey Estate, and immediately knows that crooks are in control of the city, and that after a goodly amount of trouble the hero will clean things up more or less effectually, street railways being invariably linked with corrupt practices in our modern American fiction. The expected happens. A stroke of luck enables Henry to obtain written and conclusive proof of the nefarious doings of the Mayor and of various other people, including one of the Trustees of the Cantey Estate; the efforts of these to obtain "the papers" are thwarted, and when the tale ends all good and desirable things have come to Henry. He is in control of the political situation and the Cantey Estate, he has won the girl he loves, and power to write has returned to him, and his new book is talked about by his publishers and his best friend "with as great respect as they would have shown in discussing Stevenson or Dickens or Shakespeare himself," they being firmly convinced of Henry's genius—which is more than can be said of the reader.

Although in the latter part of the book the very slow movement of the story quickens and Henry, who has heretofore drifted along rather helplessly, suddenly becomes a man of swift and vigorous action, the tale drags badly, while Henry is neither especially sympathetic nor, to use a well-worn word for which no satisfactory substitute has yet been found, especially convincing. We are told that he was a genius; but our belief in his remarkable gifts depends upon our willingness to accept the author's word for them. We are told that "he was pouring out a torrent of eloquence * * * he was utterly fascinating"; but the speech which is given as proof of his eloquence impresses us but little, and we never feel his fascination. All the women who know him, however, succumb to it with the utmost promptness. Twice is he driven to change his lodging because of enamored females with whom he has philandered more or less, and both of whom aver their complete willingness to dispense with the marriage ceremony and accompany him to any section of the globe which he may prefer. He had been faithful to the memory of his dead wife; "Through four terrible years he had not kissed a woman's hand," (!) but Mary Maloney, though occasionally ungrammatical, had "soft little fingers," and Henry found her eminently kissable. Nevertheless, he did not stray far from the paths of virtue, and though he held her in his arms on more than one occasion he always made a point of advising her to marry the foreman—with especial firmness, after he himself had fallen in love with beautiful Miriam Cantey, who, on her part, responded so quickly she did not even have time to find out that he was a widower.

There are a number of minor characters in the story, many of them cleverly individualized, and Mr. Merwin's views on the writing of biography are interesting. He makes his strong man of big business, Jim Cantey, declare that "as a people we shrink from the facts about life and living," and that the public mind has been so falsely trained that people would not be willing to accept the truth about the men they call great. He himself had not only bought his own Senatorship, but sent many "hired men" to Congress, and had found that the real ruler of the country was the money power, while business was "warfare in which the shrewdest and strongest survive." This Jim Cantey, dead before the story begins, is by all odds its most interesting character, a man whose force one feels. The newspaper world, where Henry finds himself a complete misfit because of his truth-telling, and the advertising business each play a part in the story, the former being closely connected with the political machine, subservient to its dictates and those of the advertisers in all matters, whether of dramatic criticism or of the Mayor's sobriety. There are a good many interesting and sincerely written bits in "The Passionate Pilgrim," but it is not an example of its author's best work.

SPEARS OF DESTINY

SPEARS OF DESTINY. By Arthur D. Howden Smith. New York: George H. Doran Company.

THE sub-title of this novel is "A Story of the First Capture of Constantinople," and since the future of that ancient city is a matter of considerable uncertainty just now, and Constantinople is, therefore, much in the world's eye, the book has the advantage of a timely topic at least. For the rest, it cannot be said that it is particularly strong, dramatically or otherwise, and the fact that it is written in the style of Scott, Bulwer Lytton, and Hewlett when they deal with mediaeval European history hardly lifts it above the level of fictional commonplace. The period is that of King John of England, and part of the action takes place in that country. The young Lord Hugh de Chesby, of Norman stock, is in love with a Saxon maiden of gentle birth, the Lady Edith, and we meet them at the beginning riding in a wood after hunting. There are footpads, an affray, in which the longbow of Ralph, a sturdy English yeoman, does valiant execution, and in which several men are killed with as little unconcern to the slayer as if they had been so many rats. All that was characteristic of "Merrie England" in such books as this, however, and it is easily accepted. Later, Hugh, with a jongleur named Matteo as a companion, and with his faithful Ralph to attend him, goes to the Continent of Europe, and in due time finds himself mixed up with the fighting at Constantinople.

It is explained that Hugh's object in riding about the countries is to find his father, who mysteriously disappeared years before, and is said to have been captured and killed by the paynim. Hugh does not believe his father is dead, and he goes forth, very much in the serio-comic romantic manner of Don Quixote himself, and with about the same misty plans as to direction and daily action. Under these circumstances it is little wonder that Hugh had several narrow escapes from assassins who coveted his rich clothing and accoutrements, or that he fell across palmers, beautiful women of amorous leanings, robbers of all kinds, and a few Saracens and Turks. Of course, there are repeated references to Richard Coeur de Lion of England, and the desperate work he did in the Crusades, while knightly rowdies with the cross on their shields and breastplates are as frequent as the churls and varlets liberally sprinkled about in Hugh's path through the book.

The story is told well enough, for a melodramatic affair of its kind, but it gives the impression of being overcrowded with trivial incidents, with the plot coming to the surface only now and then. It is conceivable that a boy in his early teens, to whom "Ivanhoe" and "The Last of the Barons" might seem a little too mature, would find entertainment in this story. At all events, he would get plenty of reading for his money, for the book is unconscionably long.

THE BLOOMING ANGEL

THE BLOOMING ANGEL. By Wallace Irwin. Illustrated. George H. Doran Company.

A VERY brilliant writer once remarked that "a difference of taste in jokes is a great strain on the affections." Yet there is perhaps nothing in the world upon which people are less in accord than in their opinions of what is and is not funny. To some a "custard pie" movie seems the very acme of humor; others delight in "Patience" and "The Pirates of Penzance." Taking this divergence of tastes into due consideration, it seems altogether probable that there are persons who will find Mr. Wallace Irwin's new story, "The Blooming Angel," extremely amusing, while to others reading it will be a good deal of a task. It is a sort of extravaganza, with a man,

The Secret of the Tower

Anthony Hope's first novel since 1914—a mystery story of today with the same romantic charm that has made "The Prisoner of Zenda" such a favorite for years. The tower presents a mystery that defies detection. All the loves and adventures of an unusually interesting group of men and women center about its secret. It's stirring story-telling from start to finish—live-wire romance.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

E. B. M.—Please advise me who is the author of "Shakespeare and His Friends," "Of the Youth of Shakespeare," and of "The Secret Passion." I have all three bound in one volume together. They were published in New York, 1853, Stringer & Townsend. I should like also to read "a literary criticism" upon these novels, if you know of any.

The author of the three books named is Robert Folkestone Williams, Professor of Ancient and Modern History of the Calvary College, Richmond, England. He published many works, some under the name of Folkestone Williams, and some anonymously. "The Youth of Shakespeare" was published in 1839, "Shakespeare and His Friends" in 1838, and "The Secret Passion" in 1844. His characteristics as a historical writer were thus summed up by The London Athenaeum in 1860:

"A very able and steady hand he is at discovering and stocking materials; but the artistic ability to arrange them falls him nearly altogether."

We do not know of any literary criticism of his Shakespeare novels.

"The New Church Organ"

E. D.—Would you tell me where to find the poem in which occur the following lines:

They've got a bran' new organ, Sue,

Also:

An' after every verse, you know, they play a little tune.
I didn't understand, an' so I started in too soon.

I have forgotten the title of the poem. I would also like the piece "Darius Green and His Flying Machine," by Trowbridge.

The first poem is "The New Church Organ," by Will M. Carleton. It is in Bryant's "New Library of Poetry and Song" and other volumes of verse. It is too long for these columns. The same is true of "Darius Green," which is published in the "Home Book of Verse," by B. E. Stevenson, and in other collections.

"The Ahkoond of Swat"

M. S. HOLLISTER—Could you kindly tell me who wrote "The Ahkoond of Swat," and in what volume of verse can the piece be found?

It was written by G. T. Lanigan, and may be found in "The Poetry of Wit and Humor" and "Treasury of Humorous Poetry," both by F. L. Knowles; "An American Anthology," by E. C. Stedman; "Every Day in the Year," by J. L. and M. K. Ford; "The Home Book of Verse," by Burton E. Stevenson, and "A Nonsense Anthology," by Carolyn Wells.

Landscape Painting

ARTHUR A. SORA.—Where can I get a book of instruction on landscape painting?

"Landscape Painting in Oil Colors," by S. N. Carter, Educational Publishing Company, 18 East Seventeenth Street, New York; "Brush and Pencil Notes in Landscape," by A. East, Funk & Wagnalls Company, 354 Fourth Avenue, New York; "Hints to Young Practitioners," by J. W. Alston, and "Practical Treatise on Landscape Painting," by John Chase.

"Garden of Proserpine"

H. P. PITCHER.—Will you please publish in your "Queries and Answers" column in THE BOOK REVIEW the name of the author of "The Garden of Proserpine."

Algernon C. Swinburne is the author of this poem.

Queen Anne Shilling

D. F. H.—Kindly let me know the value of a silver shilling of Queen Anne's reign.

It is worth about 75 cents.

Sleep Sweet

CLEO PHADEAU.—Where does the following poem appear and who is the author?

Sleep sweet within this quiet room,
O thou, whoe'er thou art,
And let no mournful yesterdays
Disturb thy quiet heart.
Nor let tomorrow scare thy rest
With dreams of coming ill.

They are the first six lines of "Sleep Sweet," by Ellen M. H. Gates, which appears in "Heart Throbs," Volume I., by the Chapple Publishing Company, Boston, Mass.

"The Ladies"

K. M. B.—Please tell me in what poem the following line occurs: "And I learned about women from her." I think it was written by Kipling, but have not been able to find it.

The line is from "The Ladies," by Rudyard Kipling. It is in his "Collected Verse," published by Doubleday, Page & Co.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

W. W. SUNDERLAND.—Answering the inquiry of F. C. Meyn, in issue of June 29, the poem asked for is entitled "The African Chief," by William C. Bryant, and consists of eight eight-line stanzas, the lines quoted being the first or beginning of poem.

This query was answered also by "L. B.," Kingston, N. Y.; "A. F. B.," Norwalk, Conn.; William T. McMullan, New York; George Howard Reed, Jersey City, N. J.; Benjamin F. Leggett, Ward, Penn.; James A. Cooley, Mineola, N. Y.; Lillian Shapiro, Yorktown, Va.; Mrs. Lewis Phillips, Portsmouth, N. H.; "C. B. H.," Oneida, N. Y.; Josephine K. Purcell, Hartford, Conn.; E. R. Lamacha, Butler, N. J.; James L. Duncan, New York; Charles J. Domville, Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, Canada; John J. Curry, Schenectady, N. Y.; A. Outram Sherman, New York; J. D. Edmundson, Des Moines, Iowa; Edwin W. Finger, Morgantown, Penn.; Mrs. A. Boozer, Providence, R. I.; W. S. Hayward, Syracuse, N. Y.

Man Went Down to Panama

KATHERINE J. JUDSON.—The poem asked for by G. M. Derby in your issue of April 27 is an ode written by Percy MacKaye in honor of Colonel George W. Goethals at the time when he was made the first Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, in January, 1914.

The first stanza of the ode is:

A man went down to Panama,
Where many a man had died,
To slit the sliding mountains
And lift the eternal tide.
A man stood up in Panama,
And the mountains stood aside.

This appeal was also answered by Charles M. Fancher, Elizabeth, N. J.; S. Hartley, University Place, Neb., and Lawrence, Kingston, N. Y.

The Hill Prayer

LAWRENCE.—If W. S. Davis, who inquired, May 8, for "The Hill Prayer," has not yet found a copy he will find the poem, with illustrations, in The Century for December, 1896. The quotation should read:

I ask no more to see, to understand;
Not yet, O God, not yet the unveiled face!
Let me through many Springtimes search the grace
In one of these the marvels of Thy hand.

The author of "The Hill Prayer" is Marian Warner Wildman.

Old Battlefields

JANE R. SHAW.—The old poem asked for by Frances Nimmo Greene was written by J. L. Coalan, is called "Old Battlefields," and runs as follows:

Long years of peace have stilled the battle-thunder,
Wild grasses quiver where the fight was won.
Masses of blossom, lightly blown asunder
Drop down white petals on the silent gun;
For life is kind, and sweet things grow unbidden
Turning the scenes of strife to bloomy bowers;
One only knows what secrets may be hidden
Beneath his cloud of flowers.
Poor heart, above thy field of sorrow sighing
For smitten faith, and hope untimely slain,
Leave thou the soil wherein thy dead are lying
To the soft sunlight and the cleansing rain;
Love works in silence, hiding all the traces
Of bitter conflict on the trampled sod,
And time shall show thee all life's battle places
Veiled by the hand of God.

Song of a Thousand Years

GEORGE R. CORNWELL.—The patriotic song beginning "Lift Up Your Eyes," asked for by "W. B. B." in your issue of May 11, is entitled "Song of a Thousand Years." The words and music, which are by Henry Clay Work, are printed in "Heart Songs," published by Chapple Publishing Company of Boston.

This appeal was also answered by Mrs. R. R. Collins, Westfield, N. J.; Eleanor M. Jones, N. Y.; Miss A. S. Wilson, Port Chester, N. Y.; Alice C. Benton, Hillsboro, N. C.; Clarence Willis, Bath, N. Y.; M. Burgert, Hudson, N. Y.; John R. Lightfoot, Derby, Conn., and Emma C. McFarland, Brooklyn, N. Y.

From the Koran

LAWRENCE.—"F. M. C." whose query as to the source of verses beginning "Could you with ink the ocean fill," appeared April 27, is informed that they were probably suggested by this quotation from the Koran:

If whatever trees were in the earth were pens, and He should, after that, swell the sea into seven seas of ink, the words of God would not be exhausted, for God is mighty and wise. ("Koran," E. K. Lokman.)

The Alamo

JAMES S. COOLEY.—In response to the query of A. D. Williams in THE BOOK REVIEW of June 8, asking for a book descriptive of the "Battle of the Alamo," would say that I have had in my library for some years a book entitled "Remember the Alamo," written by Amelia E. Barr, published by Hunt & Eaton, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York, and copyrighted by Dodd, Mead & Co. in 1898. This book, while fiction, gives in some detail the story of the fall of the Alamo, but does not contain the poem referred to by Mr. Williams.

Allen S. Williams and W. P. Oliver, Brooklyn, N. Y.; "J. E. D.," South Orange, N. J., and Mrs. S. Mortimer, Derby, Conn., also write replies to the query referring to the book mentioned above.

"Cheer, Boys, Cheer"

G. W.—"Sebastopol," referred to by "M. C." is probably a part of a parody on one of the songs of Henry Russel, the American vocalist, whose concert I attended in Banbury Town Hall, England, about 1853 or 1854, and before the commencement of the Crimean war. It is "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," and is about as follows:

Cheer, boys, cheer,
Drive off all idle sorrow,
Courage, brave hearts,
Shall bear us on our way;
Do not despair;
Wait for a bright tomorrow;
Till then forget
The darkness of today.

Farewell, England,
Much as we may love thee;
We'll shed no tears
As we have done before;
Over the sea
There's wealth for honest labor,
Farewell, England,
Farewell for evermore.

There was no reference to Sebastopol in Russel's "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," because the Crimean war had not commenced. Henry Russel's most rousing song was "To the West, to the West, to the land of the free, where mighty Missouri rolls down to the sea."

"The Trumpet Call"

ADELAIDE KNIGHT.—In answer to "E. A. B.," June 29, I would say that the lines quoted are from "The Trumpet Call," by Alfred Noyes, and may be found in the volume called "The Lord of Misrule," published by Frederick A. Stokes Company.

Replies were received also from E. E. Taylor, Trenton, N. J.; J. C. Metcalf, University, Va.; Free Public Library, East Orange, N. J.

"Minnie Minton"

JOHN GADE.—Replying to the request of Mary Archer Knapp, June 29, for a civil war ballad, entitled "Minnie Minton," I would say that it was written and composed by James O. Clark, and was published by Charles H. Ditson, 8 East Thirty-fourth Street, New York.

Copies of the song were received from "L. B.," Kingston, N. Y.; Mrs. A. Boozer, Providence, R. I.

"Buena Vista"

L. B.—The song from which Clarence Willis, June 29, quoted the first stanza is entitled "Buena Vista; or, The Dying Soldier." I send a copy.

It is too long for these columns. The copy has been sent to Mr. Willis.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

plorations west of the Mississippi, and in clear, often vigorous, and, it must be confessed, frequently commonplace, rhymed verse he relates the hardships, the delights, the adventures, and the tragedies of the pioneers of the twenties.

In his "New Era in American Poetry," Mr. Louis Untermeyer speaks of "the over-stressed virility of John G. Neihardt." This seems rather an unfair remark, if we admit that Mr. Neihardt's characters are within the legitimate field of poetry. For "Ashley's hundred" were not dilettanti. They were hard with a hardihood scarcely existent in the round world today; they fought and played and lusted and acquired, and took punishment like a bulldog; and always they pushed on into the unknown, consumed by an urgency for gain and conquest:

For a little space
Their life-fires flared like torches in the van
Of westward progress, ere the great wind woke
To snuff them. Many vanished like a smoke
The bitse air drinks; and e'en of those who burned
Down to the socket, scarce a tithe returned
To share at last the ways of quiet men,
Or see the hearth-reek drifting once again
Across the roofs of old St. Louis town.

In the experiences of these men Mr. Neihardt sees the material for an American saga. His "masted keelboats" of the Missouri and the Yellowstone are as freighted with the stuff that dreams are made of as the far-venturing bark of Leif Erickson or the galleys of ancient Greece:

Their hulks have found the harbor ways that know
The ships of all the Sagas, long ago—
A moony haven where no loud gale stirs.
The trappers and the singing voyageurs
Are comrades now of Jason and his crew,
Foregathered in that timeless rendezvous
Where come at last all seekers of the Fleece.

An "urgency for gain and conquest" may seem so damning an indictment of the motives of Mr. Neihardt's characters as to put them, in the estimation of many, outside the pale of poetry altogether, but they are the motives of the Argonauts of all time, and so far from regretting that the author has chosen a theme remote from the welter of psychoses and neuroses and young freedoms and old enslavements that surrounds us, the present writer at least finds his return to the simplicities and forthrightness of instinct expressing itself by action rather than words, refreshing. Will Carpenter, Mike Fink, and Frank Talbeau could see ghosts, but they did not concern themselves about "their sex and their soul," and the tragedy which overtook them is the inevitable, natural tragedy which finally overtakes all wild creatures.

How far Mr. Neihardt has lived up to his subject and to his own intentions toward it is another story. He has not altogether failed, yet he has by no means altogether succeeded. He is a plodder, not a flier, and a tale of this sort needs the wheeling, swooping vision of the hawk or the eagle for its proper recording. He has said, "Go to, I will write an American saga"—and sagas are not written in that way. But inasmuch as he has seen the poetic possibilities of autochthonous legend, and has rescued so much of its incident and some part of its atmosphere from the gullet of oblivion, we owe him gratitude.

MEDIOCRITY

THE NEMESIS OF MEDIOCRITY. By Ralph Adams Cram, Litt. D., LL. D. Boston: Marshall Jones Company.

RALPH ADAMS CRAM wrote "The Nemesis of Mediocrity," in its present form, in the Spring of 1918, and it was published in May of that year. After the stirring events of the Summer and Autumn he was asked if he would not have different things to say about the lack of leadership in the world. A new edition of the book is now published, with a "postscript" under date of Feb. 12.

The burden of the essay will be remembered. Both as introduction of the theme to those who have not read it before, and as example of the author's exquisite style to those who do not know it, we quote from the opening paragraphs:

Already the revelations of war have cast their searching and mordant light on all that was brought over to us out of the last century, and nothing is as it seemed in those far and half mythical days when there was no war and we maintained a serene content well grounded on its broad base of solid accomplishment. It was a proud, even an august possession, this hoard of coined wealth such as men had never gathered before, made up as it was of all the proud and shining coveters minted out of Renaissance, Reformation, and Revolution, and with this vast reserve our solvency seemed beyond suspicion. The touch of war is like that of the magician in the fairy tale, and enough of the bright counters already have turned to dried and worthless leaves to make us wonder if in the end a single coin may remain to us, honest gold, unclipped, and undebased. • • •

Among these revelations there is none more unexpected, more baffling in the fact of its existence or broader in its ramifications, than the loss of leadership. Today, when men cry aloud, as never before, for guides, interpreters, leaders, there is none to answer; in any category of life, issuing out of any nation. None, that is, that matches in power the exigency of the demand.

The author goes on in his essay to explain the "nemesis of mediocrity" in the failure of democracy, "as it is interpreted today," and of modern "democratic" education and institutions, to produce real leaders.

Now comes the postcript at the end of the war. And in answer to the question put him, he writes in part:

Yes, in one respect a different estimate would be set down, but its nature makes only more salient the lack of real leadership in the categories of civil life and thought. Leadership in religion and philosophy is perhaps a degree less evident than it was nine months ago. • • • In politics and statecraft the world has on the one hand lost a real leader in Roosevelt, while on the other a sort of merger has been effected whereby—for the moment at least—all issues have been pooled in one extraordinary personality who has become a kind of super-leader, universal dictator, manager of the World—the adequate phrase does not suggest itself. • • • Never before, except perhaps in the case of the Dark Ages, when Charlemagne stood as the one lone personality in the midst of blank incompetence, has a phenomenon such as this presented itself. Of the ultimate result for the world it is still too early to venture a forecast. On the historians of the far future must fall the burden of estimate. • • •

There is one field, however, in which real leadership has appeared, manifesting itself very largely since this book was written; the field of action. • • • Since the great eighteenth of July men of action have leaped to the front with a swiftness that is matched only by quality. • • • What was is earnest of what may be, and here lies the great hope in a time of great doubt.

In the field of action leadership at last has shown itself.

"The Nemesis of Mediocrity" will no doubt be read by many Americans who do not agree with its author's premise, or who do not go with him all the way. And that is as it should be. For it is a book to challenge and to stimulate, whether we share the author's precise feeling or not.

BOOK REVIEWING.

The New York Times Review of Books:

NOT long ago, while lunching with a gentleman well connected in the publishing world, the subject of book reviewing insisted upon intruding itself. He seemed to regard a reviewer as being something of a bull—at least, he affirmed that a jacket blurb was a red flag to reviewers. However, it may take a bull to catch a bull, and all literature is spotted with bulls. As proof, read the reviews.

Now, I have reviewed many books. Some of them were novels; most were scientific works. I told my luncheon companion—my guest, in fact—that I believed a good plan would be to permit only writers to review books. Still better, reviewers should be writers who have a "work" that will imminently appear for review.

During four years, as associate editor of perhaps the foremost engineering periodical of this country, I wrote-up a number of technical books. I was merciless. When I opened a new book, it was to search for errors. A typographical error was the inspiration for a caustic paragraph; a misplaced decimal point was a delight.

Then I wrote a novel, which is now on the presses. Some dozen times I have reread that novel, and always I have found errors in it—mostly typographic.

From time to time novels are sent me for review. I study them through new spectacles. Instead of seeing black print on fairly white paper, I visualize an earnest, perspiring writer who hopes he has done something good and is trying to "get it right" on paper, to get it ready for the reviewers. Into my analytic mind—once so glacial—has crept sympathy, like the rising sun of a Summer's day.

Now, when I open a new book I say to myself, "Here is a lad who wants to help the world and himself, who desires to make humanity happier and his own life easier." If he is atrocious I condemn him, if he is mediocre I reveal his impotency, but if he has written a strong story I commend him, no matter what impregnable and highly respectable fortress he may attack. And as for decimal points or misspelled words, if I see them, I mentally blame the compositors' union.

My luncheon friend, whose house has sent forth many books for review, agreed that it would be excellent if the reviewer could put himself in his—the perspiring, one might almost say sweating, author's—place. ALDEN W. WELCH.

German Peace Treaty

(As It Was Signed)

—With Explanatory Maps—

THE ENTIRE TREATY, WORD FOR WORD

The Only Publication in America Containing the Official Text with Maps, (the U. S. Government Official Publication Did Not Include the Maps.)

August Current History Magazine

(The Monthly Periodical Published by The New York Times Company)

The Current History Magazine, August issue, contains the complete revised text of the German Peace Treaty and the Covenant of the League of Nations, in its entirety, word for word, just as it was signed and deposited in the archives of the French Republic.

Accompanying the text are explanatory maps of the new German frontier.

This document has not previously been printed in its complete form with maps anywhere else in America.

The August issue contains also the official texts of

The Treaty Creating the New Polish State, (with its important clauses relating to the protection of religious and social minorities,) also The Franco-American-British Alliance in textual form.

In the August issue of Current History there is also printed a complete, consecutive, thrilling account of how the agreement was finally reached, the signing of the document, its ratification by Germany, and the declarations regarding it by President Wilson, Secretary Lansing, Premiers Clemenceau and Lloyd George.

The August Current History Magazine contains also a survey of important happenings during July in the chief nations of the world, with special accounts of the month's phases in Russia, Poland, Germany, Czechoslovakia, and the United States.

The illustrations in the August number are in rotogravure, and portray the historic signing of the treaty and other events of permanent, historical interest.

There are 18 cartoons by artists of reputation on international events.

Current History Magazine differs from other review periodicals in that it omits Editorial Comment. It gives the authentic facts based on official records—the reader is permitted to put his own interpretation on these facts and reach his own conclusions without having any opinions of the magazine thrust upon him.

a girl, and a recipe for making rouge as its chief ingredients.

The man is one Chester A. Framm, and when the tale opens he is a student at Dyak University, where his mother runs a laundry. Having come to the university to study, he is of course a solemn ass. All young men who go to college for purposes of study are solemn asses, according to the purveyors of our popular light fiction. A young woman belonging to his own particular species of the genus homo has incited him with an ambition to become a great orator; but she of course is not the girl in the case. That rôle is filled by a very illiterate, very smart and very blonde young person, whose charms no man—in the opinion of the author—can possibly resist. Her name is Florabel Brannon, and she is generally known as Floss or Flossie. Floss attends a meeting of the Debating Society and demonstrates her smartness, also her lack of good feeling and good breeding, by openly and audibly ridiculing the speakers. Of course Chester falls in love with her, but as he doesn't at all approve of her, he has no intention of marrying her. However, having been expelled from the college, she comes and proposes to him. After which, she promptly proceeds to make his fortune by means of an old recipe for rouge given her by her grandmother, which, with the assistance of an elephant and her own photograph, she contrives to put on the market under the name of "Angel Bloom Cream." The remainder of the book is devoted to an account of her successful efforts to amass a large amount of money, advertise her husband, and thwart his persistent desire to make speeches.

CHEERIO!

CHEERIO! By Harold M. Hays. With frontispiece. Alfred A. Knopf.

MAJOR HAYS, who has chosen the English phrase "Cheerio!" as a title for his interesting book, is one of the American doctors who when the United States entered the war proffered their services to their country. They reached France at a time when the greater part of the American Army was still in the making, and so formed a sort of vanguard. Major Hays himself was assigned to service with the British Expeditionary Force, and it is of what he saw and experienced among them, in battalion and field ambulance, that he writes. He worked in France, at a station which served the walking wounded and was also used as an evacuation point for the ambulances, and later went beyond this post, up into the trenches.

As a clear and enlightening narrative of what happened to an American doctor without military experience, attached to the British Expeditionary Force, among men many of whom had already seen nearly four years of warfare, his book has a value apart from that which always belongs to a frank record of personal experiences at the front. He tells us of night marches and of German prisoners, of the striking difference in the way men bear pain, according as their injuries result from fighting or from accident behind the lines, of the courage of the Tommies, "the skill and gentleness of the British orderlies," and the devotion of the stretcher-bearers. There are several interesting pages devoted to the personal fetiches, the charms and lucky pieces which so many men carried at the front, and a number of amusing anecdotes. The book closes with an appendix appropriately entitled "Hun Red Cross Fiends," which has to do with some of the German methods in the treatment of wounded prisoners, and another dealing with the "Hun Torture of Prisoners," both of which should be carefully read by all those who are in any danger of being misled by German wailings and German hypocrisy.

AS "PAT" CROWE FLIES

PAT CROWE, AVIATOR. By Lieutenant James Richard Crowe, A. E. F., of Alabama. With frontispiece portrait, a jacket design by Private R. G. Russom, Australian E. F., and introduction by W. B. Chase. New York: Nicholas L. Brown.

PERHAPS the editor may be commended for not calling these romantic stories by a poetic title, "Wings in the Gale; or, Windows in Clouds," one of the chapter headings, or even "Jacqueline," after an alluring heroine. He possibly feared the mark of fiction might not tempt hundreds of hearts borne up through deeds of aviator sons, brothers, or sweethearts to read and relive the proud days brought home through their own letters from "over there." The most picturesque presentation could not have misled those hungry for aerial adventure and excitement. Here is a birdman's view of the fields where poppies blow—

Gentlemen:-

We cannot refrain from offering our warmest congratulations on the new novel of Mr. Snaith, "THE UNDEFEATED". In our estimation the greatest English novel of the year. It reflects the indomitable will and courageous spirit of the great English nation as has been done by no other novel, with the possible exception of "MR BRITLING", and the "UNDEFEATED" far surpasses "MR BRITLING" in its intense realism.

Snaith is an author who is creating literature; the type of novel that a bookseller enjoys selling to a customer. It creates a sale for more and better books, we are

The Great Japanese Novel

AN ADOPTED HUSBAND

By Futabatei

A peculiar interest attaches to this book, which is probably the first modern Japanese novel to appear in English. The story is of a Japanese family—the Onos—and the institution, little understood in the West, of the adopted husband. As the author unfolds the lives of the five main characters he gives a most interesting picture of contemporary life in a Japanese city.

"Has the stature of great art and the gesture of life."—Tribune.
"Fascinating. Not until the book is put down is it realized how alive everyone in it has been and how real is their story."—Globe.

Let Me Have That Story

If anybody can help you sell it, I can.

Many a rattling good story has gone unpublished because an Editor-in-chief never saw it, and some hurried and harried subordinate sent it back without half studying its possibilities.

I know, because I have edited national periodicals. And that's just where I come in to serve you now. I've been editing steadily since 1904.

Up to the end of last month I was Editor-in-chief of "Everybody's Magazine." Before that I had been Managing Editor of "Everybody's"; Managing Editor of "Harper's Weekly"; editor and manager of a syndicate; editor and managing editor of a newspaper; special writer, reporter, and cub.

I know the editorial end of the publishing business from the outside in and from the inside out.

I have written and sold books, stories, articles, scenarios.

I know the troubles and difficulties of the writer as well as the worries and problems of the busy editor.

I am in daily touch with the great periodicals of America. I know the editorial heads of them, personally. I keep informed of their changing needs, from week to week, month to month. That's my business.

When I read a manuscript I have back of me this acquaintance and information, and the practical experience of years of buying for publication. I come pretty close to knowing, as soon as I read a manuscript, whether it is salable; and if not, whether it can be made so, and how.

My purpose is to make an experienced editor immediately accessible to writers, and to combine intelligent, constructive suggestion with the functions of the literary agent.

Each manuscript that is sent to me receives my personal study. My suggestions are not alone literary criticisms; they are helpful, practical hints from editor to writer, based upon long experience and up-to-the-minute knowledge of what is in demand in the ever-shifting literary market.

My charge for a reading, with full letter of suggestion and criticism, is $5 for a short-story, single article or short scenario; longer manuscripts in proportion. If I sell a manuscript, I receive the agent's usual ten per cent. commission, and refund the reading charge.

It need to be hard to get into the editorial sanctum, or otherwise to get the attention of the editor himself. It isn't any more. The address is

MR. RUSSELL ON BOLSHEVISM AND THE UNITED STATES

By EDWARD A. BRADFORD

BOLSHEVISM AND THE UNITED STATES. By Charles Edward Russell. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company.

THERE have been several excellent books of impressions of events in Russia, and singularly enough some of the best of them have been by woman authors. Mr. Russell has his impressions, too, and expresses them excellently. What distinguishes his book from those of the woman writers is that he gives more attention than they to the politics of Bolshevism, to the analysis of it as a scheme of government, and the application of it to American affairs. His narrative has many thrills, and his criticism is searching. He testifies as a resident eyewitness, and he quotes historic documents plentifully. His book is as authentic and authoritative as we are likely to have soon, and his style is vivid. Altogether a notable publication regarding current events.

Mr. Russell says that his book is a study in psychology and pathology, made so by the morbid personality of Vladimir Ulianov, otherwise Nicolai Lenin. He came from a family of landed gentry, not noble, and adopted the name over which he wrote as a nom de plume for his family name. While still young his brother was hanged for killing an official of the Czar's Government, and his mind received a cast of hatred for autocracy. His mind also was early set in that contempt of the peasants which is characteristic of Russian landowners. He was often a fugitive, sometimes in jail, and a political police hound was generally on his tracks, but without finding nonpolitical crimes. Betweentimes he wrote revolutionary propaganda successfully, and always plotted, without objecting to cooperate with others less respectable than himself and betraying them without scruple—as later he betrayed Governments—when they had served his purpose in realizing his "great idea," over which he brooded for years before taking overt steps to realize it.

Mr. Russell candidly confesses inability to define Bolshevism, for it changes as much as the mind of its inventor, now dictator of the dictatorship of the proletariat. It is an art rather than a principle, and a section of its content can only be gained by observation of its practice. The word Bolshevist is not Ulianov's, and means only a member of the majority of the party which, under his leadership, stood for party control by a few of superior mind rather than by a majority. There is another contradiction when the majority became a minority and still retained the name no longer descriptive of it. The notion the future dictator defeated was called Menshevic, or minority, and that name, too, was retained after it became a majority by defeating its Bolshevist opponents. Mr. Russell condems the attempt to make Bolshevism seem democratic or respectable because of its name, when in fact it is menshevic now.

The definition of "soviet" is as necessary to an understanding of Russian events as an understanding of Ulianov's psychology.

This somewhat formidable word means merely a legislative and governing assembly of elected delegates. A City Council, a Board of County Commissioners, a State Legislature, or the Congress of the United States might be a soviet. Soviets quickly took the place of the old Municipal Councils in the towns and cities. Every Government (or province) has its soviet, ostensibly elected by the vote of the people.

After the revolution and deposition of the Czar it was a boast that all Russians, men and women, stood upon the same social level in an absolute democracy. After the soviet régime was established it was a queer sort of democracy, the basis of suffrage being one vote for each soldier, one-eighth vote for every factory worker, one-eightieth vote for each peasant. The largest proportion of the electorate allowed to be Bolshevists or majority party is one-sixth, with an opinion that one-twelfth is more nearly right. And one mind dictates the acts of the one-twelfth of 180,000,000 who rule each day in a crazy contradiction of yesterday's acts.

It would be agreeable to give Russia's several Constitutions and Mr. Russell's analysis of them. It is only practicable to say that these pages are good reading, and the Constitutions are forgotten when issued. Mr. Russell is unable to understand why they were issued, for Constitutions do not bind dictators or anarchists, but he gives the rationale of the dictatorship of the proletariat. It was an industrial revolution rather than a political, for the Czar had gone and politics was forgotten when Ulianov "arrived." He believed that the industrial workers produced everything, and should have everything. The peasants were merely despised. The bourgeoisie were hated. The peasants were merely bribed with land, mostly unfit for tillage, and if tilled was useless because of distance from railways, which alone could bring the harvests to market and use. The bourgeoisie were put to road cleaning or the care of latrines. This was revenge, not economics. The oversight was that there was no provision for feeding the industrial proletariat, who were given everything, but left to starve. The result is that another revolution seems ripening, with martyrdom for Ulianov. He expects it for himself, but he believes that his Great Idea will survive. Mr. Russell has his doubts, but compares his hero with Mohammed as the man who has influenced most minds in the shortest time. In 1917 only a thousand or two had heard of Bolshevism. In 1919 there was issued a call for a convention of thirty-nine Bolshevist groups scattered throughout the world, including three from the United States.

Nevertheless Mr. Russell thinks that Bolshevism and Americanism are irreconcilable:

> Bolshevism decries and denies democracy, and democracy is the foundation of American life. Bolshevism frankly proclaims a dictatorship, and we have lately concluded an appallingly expensive war to prevent the spread of autocracy. Bolshevism favors violence, which we abhor, and war, whereas we are in the mass committed to peace. It abolishes the methods of order that are almost formulas with us. It is basically anarchistic, whereas we more than any other people have professed hostility to anarchism. It recognizes class and class government, whereas we have argued that in a republic classes have no place. It is grossly and incurably inefficient, and we profess efficiency as our materialistic religion.

The passage is quoted partly because Mr. Russell proceeds to suggest for the United States what he has denounced in Russia. Since he is a Socialist and Trade Unionist it is less surprising than otherwise it might be, that he proposes for us a sort of craft government. In his own words:

> Our civilization has become industrial, while our political machinery is all rural and feudalistic. The anomaly will have to be abolished some day, and this is the best substitute so far devised. There is much more sense in allowing the carpenters to have their Congressman, and the ironmolders theirs, and the bricklayers theirs, than in taking a map and putting all the people in one neighborhood, or one State, into one miscellaneous mass, allowing them to scramble out with a Congressman that nobody knows, and that knows nothing about them, or the real problems of their daily lives.

Mr. Russell has much of the feeling for industrial producers that he ascribes to Ulianov, and condemns its dictatorship in Russia. Yet under lawful forms Mr. Russell would substitute government by crafts and classes for government by citizen in his own country. Ulianov was compelled into his contradictions by events too strong for even a dictator to resist. But Mr. Russell of his free choice makes a like proposal for the United States. Americans will find greater profit in the Russian part of his notable book.

"GREATHEART"

"GREATHEART." The Life Story of Theodore Roosevelt. By Niel McIntyre. New York: William Edwin Rudge.

General Leonard Wood, Theodore Roosevelt's old comrade in arms, contributes a short introduction to this latest book about the famous ex-President, in which he says: "'Great-Heart' is dead but his influence lives on," and the author states that his aim has been to show why Rudyard Kipling thought Roosevelt the incarnation of Bunyan's character "Great-Heart." The book makes no pretense to completeness or finality. It is almost entirely anecdotal, telling stories of Roosevelt as "regular boy," ranchman, soldier and statesman. "The author will be content," says Mr. McIntyre, "if the average man or woman or boy or girl feels beating through these pages the warm pulses of him who was indeed 'Great-Heart.'"

Most of the anecdotes are familiar to all who have dabbled in Rooseveltiana; in fact, many of them have been told so often that a cursory reader of the newspapers will recognize them. The fact that such a large number can be collected by a writer like Mr. McIntyre, whose task it was to get out a book about Roosevelt at top speed, only goes to show once more the remarkable nature of the fame of Roosevelt, which caused stories of his exploits to spring up as around a great hero of legend.

To boys, especially, Mr. McIntyre's book will be welcome. It is written in a spirit that will appeal to them, emphasizing the love of outdoors and fair play and big game hunting that Theodore Roosevelt preserved to the very end of his life.

THE SOBER WORLD

By Randolph Wellford Smith

Author of "Ideals of Government," "Benighted Mexico," etc.

There's a touch of the theatre in this dramatic story. It is not an attempt to convert the reader! It is a smashing picture, drawn by an artist in words, of scenes at Potsdam and Washington; Carnegie and the Kaiser; the "Third House," and Germany's continuation of the war through the brewers; one of the big, vital books of the year.

SUCH FUN! That's what it is—this chuckly delightful story of a young girl, big business and a pink elephant—just irresistibly amusing.

For about eighteen years the Blooming Angel's life work had consisted of wearing a red Tam o' Shanter, cutting classes and going out with her latest beau. She suddenly acquired a husband who was thoroughly nice, but inexperienced in the art of earning a living, and then the fun began.

Delightful as was "Before the Wind," Miss Laing's new story is even more appealing. Like that, it sparkles with humorous, kindly satire, and is a rapidly moving, ingenious story of adventure; but is the richer for a touch of something deeper, more spiritual, setting it among books worth while as well as entertaining.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

SPIRITUALISM. By J. Arthur Hill. George H. Doran Company.

THE interest in spiritualistic phenomena showed a sudden and marked increase in England during the war, and that increase has not been without a certain complementary one here in the United States. Of this fact the success of certain volumes dealing more or less fully with psychic phenomena and communications purporting to come from the dead is sufficient proof. Yet the subject remains one on which the ideas of the majority of people are decidedly at loose ends, and this book was, so the author tells us in his "preface," written in order to give a comprehensive answer to the question, "What is spiritualism?" In a lucid and interesting manner, it sets forth, to quote the subtitle, the "History, Phenomena, and Doctrine" of spiritualism.

Beginning with the first traces of a belief in the survival of the spirit and its ability to communicate with the living, and even appear to them, found in ancient writings from the Bible to the literature of the Greeks and Chinese, the author passes on to Swedenborg, Mesmer, and the phenomena of clairvoyance and mysterious rappings manifested in America about the middle of the last century. Then come the story of David Dunglas Home, the famous medium; the experiences of William Stainton Moses, and the founding of the Society for Psychical Research. With the founding of this society, the entire subject may be said to have entered upon a new phase—the cautious, skeptical, investigatory and scientific. The quotations from the records of the society show how earnestly it has endeavored to guard against fraud and trickery, and to accept the spiritist explanation only when it seemed clear that no other would meet the established facts, subjecting it to what Sir Oliver Lodge calls "definite and crucial proof." Of course, the two well-known mediums, Mrs. Piper and Eusapia Palladino, are dealt with at some length, especially the former, of whom Professor William James, while he "never quite committed himself" to the spiritist explanation, declared that her trances showed knowledge which she had "never gained by the ordinary waking use of her eyes and ears and wits." However, Mrs. Piper was a professional medium, and Mr. Hill freely admits that wherever financial considerations enter, doubt enters, too. But there have been mediums other than professional, and some space is devoted to a Mrs. Thompson, who saw spirits, and got automatic writing, as well as the rarer manifestations of trance speech.

Apparitions, various physical phenomena and phenomena in India are the subjects of other chapters, and next comes what might well be regarded as the most important part of the book—the chapter on "Evidence, Proof, and Belief." Unfortunately, in the copy sent out by the publishers for review, the conclusion to this chapter is lacking. The pages from 174 to 191 are missing. According to the "Table of Contents" these should be the ones treating of "Materialistic and Other Objections," but the paging as listed in the table of contents and that which appears in the book itself have little or nothing to do with each other. Because of these absent pages, the reviewer who has been perusing with interest Mr. Hill's theory as to the mental and psychological attitude necessary for the acceptance of unfamiliar truths, suddenly is plunged into the midst of what presently proves to be an account of the services held at the Sunday evening meeting in a spiritualist church. This is discovered to be part of a description of "Spiritualism As a Religion," the author's opinion being that "spiritualism may, indeed, be regarded as a sort of revival of true Christianity, the present Christian Church having sunk into the same stiff and objective conservatism as that of the Jews which Christ came to replace." He objects, however, to the great credence which Spiritualists as a sect give to all mediumistic phenomena.

In whatever frame of mind one reads the book, whether that of believer or of skeptic, it would seem almost impossible for any honest person to deny that Mr. Hill speaks the truth when he declares that the opponents of the Society for Psychical Research too frequently condemn that of which they know scarcely anything, and fail properly to examine the testimony before pronouncing judgment. Mr. Hill, Sir Oliver Lodge, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, and their coworkers have too much evidence on their side for their case to be dismissed with a laugh and a sneer, whether or no that evidence be in the end accepted as enforcing conviction. The book is written in a calm and temperate style, the author showing small tendency to leap at conclusions, and often himself raising objections which would scarcely occur to the ordinary reader. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle has written an "introduction" for the book, in which he tells us something of the author himself and of the difficulties under which the work was produced—difficulties which would surely have been insurmountable to one not possessed of an exceptional amount of courage and determination.

CLEMENCEAU

GEORGES CLEMENCEAU: The Tiger of France. By Georges Lecompte. Translated by Donald Clive Stuart. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

THIS book about the "Tiger of France"—and President of the Peace Conference—is not a biography, though there is a short sketch of Clemenceau's life as one chapter, but a picture. The author writes out of a deep and fervent admiration, does not blink the fact that Clemenceau has "not always been in accord with the whole of the nation" on all points, calls our attention to his passionate love of France, his "perfect communion of ideas" with his country in its time of bitter trial. He says, at the book's beginning:

> The life of Clemenceau is sixty years of battle for Liberty, for Justice, for a better lot for men, and, dominating all, a passionate love for France, which, for him, is identified with this ideal.
> No one in our time has fought for his opinions more sharply, with more witty and bolder good humor, with more implacable, jovial, and keen logic.
> A party man he certainly was, and with what untiring ardor; but without ever losing sight of the higher interests of his country!

Those who approached him at the moment of our most violent internal struggles can ever bear witness that the fierceness of his blows resulted less from his ardent temperament, over which he always kept full control, than from his faith in the correctness of his ideas and from his conviction that, in trying to have them prevail, he was defending best the moral power and future of the country.

Therefore, it is without effort that he ceases to think, write, speak, or act as a party man each time, in the hours of international tension—Tangiers, Casablanca, Agadir, defender of the law for three years' military service—he feels it his duty to unite our forces and to make a stand for the safety of France.

There follows a brief sketch of Clemenceau's devotion of his energies to his country during every moment since the German attack began. He has always foreseen and feared this "terrible drama," M. Lecompte points out; certainly he was ready for "the most resolute acts of preservation." One will never reread without emotion the articles written by Clemenceau during those first anguished days, the author continues. He is, he adds, one of the most faithful and poignant interpreters of "the suddenly awakened heroism of the French people."

It goes without saying that this is a stirring book, this series of sketches that make so fine a picture of a great statesman and a great patriot. Says the author, significantly:

> The nation recognizes herself in him. • • • He realizes its will in each one of his acts. There is a perfect understanding between France and the head of the Government.

We have the picture of him as a young man, the son of the fiery Republican doctor of the Vendee. We see him in 1871. We glimpse his work in Montmartre and follow him through his stormy political life. We see him as critic and littérateur, and then as patriot; several of his speeches are quoted at length. One of the most interesting chapters treats of "The Man," another of "Fundamental Characteristics." Then he is seen at the front, and at last in the great hour of victory.

In the last chapter the author tells of the session of the Chamber of Deputies at which the armistice was read.

> "Every clause in the armistice is strongly applauded," he says, and continues the stirring picture:
> Every one stands and applauds frantically when, with firm voice, with sober pride in his tones, Clemenceau recalls that it is by the force of her victorious arms that France is freed. • • • He closes the documents containing the armistice, he removes his spectacles. Then M. Clemenceau, who so far has dispensed with all comment on the statements so justly pitiless, overcome by the sublimity of such an event and such a time, as if all other words were superfluous, pronounces these four phrases, which the cannons' imperious voices accompany:
> "In the name of the French people, in the name of the Government of the French Republic, I send the greeting of France, one and indivisible, to our regained Alsace and Lorraine."
> Then, with one grand gesture, which carries his homage to all the graves scattered over France:
> "Honor to our great dead, who have won this victory for us."

The book, a keen and dramatic presentation of a great man and a vivid personality, closes with Clemenceau's address at the opening of the Peace Conference. A postscript tells of the attempt to assassinate him, and his brave and picturesque recital of his "impressions" on being shot.

LAD

LAD: A DOG. By Albert Payson Terhune. With frontispiece. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

LAD is no imaginary creation, but the portrait of a real dog, the wisest, bravest, most faithful and most lovable of collies. It is to his memory that this book which relates fragments of his biography is dedicated, and having read it, no one will wonder that when at last he died "a heart-sick gloom hung over The Place"—the home he had guarded so loyally, and so well. Told in the form of short stories, these adventures of his at dog shows and in encounters with thieves and various other more or less objectionable persons will surely appeal not only to all lovers and masters of dogs, but to many who have never owned any and who have no general and indiscriminate liking for them.

They are, moreover, interesting stories in themselves. The rivalry between dignified Lad and the more showy Knave for the affections of dainty, temperamental, white and gold Lady is both comic and pathetic; and who can read without something of a choke the tale called "Quiet," which tells how, when his adored "Mistress," the human goddess he devoutly worshipped, was desperately ill, Lad lay outside her door, never barking, perfectly silent, but obstinately refusing to go away, or fail to sympathize with him when, after the danger was over and he had felt her dear hand on his head once more he went wild with delight and indulged in a perfect orgy of puppet-like mischief—who was usually of a benign dignity! The book contains twelve stories, and Lad is the hero of all but one of them. This single exception, "Wolf," tells of the son of Lad and Lady. Although of course a collie of the very bluest of blue blood, he was physically a "throwback to some forgotten ancestor whose points were all defective." There seemed no hope whatever that Wolf would ever add to the string of cups and of ribbons which were among the cherished trophies of "The Place"; yet the time came when he won a very special cup all his own.

No one who has ever watched a working collie control a flock of sheep will have any doubts as to the general intelligence of the breed, but few are as wise and dear as Lad, who was indeed what his master called him—"a super-dog." These chronicles of his life, from its early gayeties to that "Day of Battle" when he, an old dog, was treacherously attacked by two young ones, and bravely and desperately fought for the life he so nearly lost, are a most welcome addition to dog-literature. They are delightfully written; so much better done indeed than any other of Mr. Terhune's work which has ever come to our attention that comparison is quite out of the question. To read the book is to find a new and dear friend in "Lad: A Dog."

AN AMERICAN SAGA

THE SONG OF THREE FRIENDS. By John Neihardt. The Macmillan Company.

WE hear a great deal nowadays about making the world safe for democracy, but much of it only tempts one to revision of the old saying about orthodoxy being my doxy and heterodoxy your doxy. Even the poets are bitten, and the new "free" democrats look down upon the ocracies of yesteryear with more than auto-aristo-pluiocratic contempt. To them Mr. Neihardt is doubtless a timid reactionary, but his poetry will give great aid and comfort to those elderly and unadventurous souls who shrink from exploring the psychical Bad Lands of Mr. Kreymborg.

In his preface to "A Song of Three Friends" Mr. Neihardt says:

> As a result of our individualistic tendencies, our numerous jostling nationalities, and our materialistic temper we Americans are prone to regard the Past as being separated from us as by an insurmountable wall. We lack the sense of racial continuity. For us it is almost as though the world began yesterday morning; and too much of our contemporary literature is based upon that view.

This is literally true, and no less inevitable than it is unfortunate. For between the fact that backgrounds play a singularly small part in our systems of popular education, and the fact that many of our poets have none but foreign backgrounds, our singing men and women to whom the past of America is a tangible and vital thing may be numbered on the fingers of one hand.

Mr. Neihardt attempts, though purely on the physical side, to supply this lack. He has chosen for his subject the early ex-

RUTH of the U. S. A.

I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country were the last words of Nathan Hale, American patriot.

Animated by this spirit, Ruth Alden sought a chance to serve her country in the late war. The chance came; it was as full of peril as a forlorn hope; a false step would mean an ignominious death.

Her story leads to the bloody battlefields of France; to Chateau Thierry; to the Argonne. But yet it is not a war novel. It is rather a wonderful presentation of the patriotic spirit of America's sons and daughters.

LATEST WORKS OF FICTION

a twentieth-century fairy tale from the clouds, simply woven with the joy of life, love, suspense, smiles through tears, and an added something suggested, but never told, by the young aviator himself.

Was there a truly beautiful Jacqueline, and did she marry her American hero, and was Lieutenant Crowe invited to the wedding in Paris at the end of the war? The editor confesses he does not know where romance ended and truth began. But in Newport recently a visitor from the South told of a beautiful Frenchwoman who had become the bride of such an aviator, a man killed in the final week of fighting last November. The young widow was visiting her husband's mother in America, said this guest. "Yes," exclaimed her Northern friend, "and I believe I can tell you her first name."

The name of "Jacqueline," real or fictitious, is in Lieutenant Crowe's pages—that of "The Most Beautiful Girl in All France." There have been others. Theo Bentzon (Mme. Blanc) wrote of one, and we have seen her French original in edition de luxe; John Ayscough is author of an Irish "Jacqueline" recently, while an American, E. P. Lyle, Jr., in "The Missourian" once had a heroine of the name, who came to Mexico in Maximilian's day from a rose garden of France. In none was any more appealing vision than the girl in pink who waved tea napkins at "Pat" Crowe, aviator, when he dropped so often from the clouds into the enchanted Corot forest of her grandmother's château, "mooning" the trees, running away to play over the towers, zest into "a spinning nose dive" when she gave him a note for his rival, or welcoming his commission as Lieutenant that let him censor his own notes to her.

Mark Twain in the tropics speaks somewhere of "purple gloom with lightning flashes." The romantic Lieutenant had his sombre moods, his moments of illumination. There is evidence in "A Birdman's St. Francis," "Strapped to a Projectile," and especially "The Hell in Helmet," in the contrasts of his "Crippled Bird," "Caravans of Peace," or "Monsieur Chenineau," and in his reverence before moonlit cloisters of cadet barracks, or at service at St. Maixent on Christmas Eve. Later at Tours, in the air, at Issoudun, these unconscious, self-revealing stories go straight to the heart of it all in their exquisitely human, whimsical view of young America in old France. Quite incidentally they carry a trained reporter's record of the hard, practical training which, multiplied into millions, was the thing that won.

The forty-eight yarns in the book have the racy American twang. Crowe first landed in Jacqueline's garden "with mud in my horns and grass in my hoofs." He learned to fly at Tours "in a good old bus we call the Flying Bedstead—they can't make any too safe when you are laying down those first few landings. This old hack has been around the circuit so often that all you have to do is to wrap the lines around the whipstock and she will bring you in, only you have to be careful to keep her from scraping you off in the barn door." Long after he wrote of his "mooning sport"—"technically it is cantour flying and is strictly 'defendu' for such as me. I know I shall be ruined for anything else from now on. In middle Tennessee they say that if you teach a horse to jump fences he is no good after that, because he likes it too well."

He spoke with tenderness of a flight of aviators dropping flowers on newly made graves. His spirit was fired by the flight of birds, by the clouds, the night sky, or dim lit cathedrals, as by the portals of heaven. "And always I must write" • • • To that impulse, amid war, is due a book of extraordinary beauty, a singular memorial of man's imagination that from Phaeton myth and Daedalus story down the ages has soared wingless to the sky and wondered at the great beyond.

PEARL ISLAND

PEARL ISLAND. By Henry C. Rowland. Illustrations by Henry Raleigh. New York: W. J. Watt & Co.

WE have with us again that same old South Sea isle—the isle where a hero and heroine who usually have hated each other, at the beginning of the book, are cast away; to find that after a few weeks of intimacy, and an enlivening partnership in slaying the boatloads of hard characters who begin to infest the island as soon as the two are left alone, they are willing and agreed to live happily ever after. It is old stuff—such old stuff that it seems impossible to give it any novelty; but Mr. Rowland has done it and done it most entertainingly. There is enough of the familiar to keep the reader from losing his way, enough of the unfamiliar to make "Pearl Island" a highly desirable companion for one of these hot afternoons which are so much harder to mitigate this Summer than they have been in former years.

For Mr. Rowland's story is no two-and-three-quarters-per-cent. affair, either in action or in sentiment. The proprieties are preserved, as in all these tropical-island tales; indeed, he preserves more of them than usual, but manages to give an unusual piquancy to the discarding of the rest. For a hundred pages or so he makes his lyplay with chaste eroticism and innocuous deshabille, and then gets down to the true business of the story, the Hero, the Heroine, and the Villain. The villain is very much like all villains, but the hero and heroine are different. The hero is not a superman; he rescues occasionally but is more often rescued. And the heroine—

Well, Mr. Rowland deserves a good deal for his heroine. "She had the face of a priggish schoolboy, serious-minded and with an intolerant expression, and the body of a very tolerant and anything but serious-minded nymph"; also, though nobody knew it just then, she had a ruthless determination to get what she wanted which would have done credit to Nicholas Lenin. She was "a Bostonian of the most radical class and appeared to have spent her life in a sort of social cold storage"; those who knew her doubted "if she would have prepared for bed in a room which contained a full-faced portrait of a man." Naturally there were hard days awaiting her on the island.

Yet Mr. Rowland's account of her sudden change from prudishness to companionability, if perhaps it owes something to the discoveries of Dr. Freud, is plausible enough; and her subsequent career is a thing of joy to the reader. There are novelists who specialize in preserving the letter of the conventions while shattering their spirit all to pieces; Mr. Rowland chips an edge off the letter here and there, as befits the canon of novels about tropical islands, but keeps a very sound and cleanly spirit. Indeed, about the only objection to his heroine is that he didn't write a thousand pages about her instead of only three hundred.

VERY GALLIC

TWO RANKS OF THE SEINE. By Fernand Vanderem. Translated by George Raffalovich. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

THIS third volume in "The Library of French Fiction" series is very Gallic indeed in its virtuosity, its easy detachment, its finely modulated irony. The author seems to be staring at his characters through a monocle, a smile curling his lip, a smile half amused, half contemptuous. There is little besides, no warmth, no sympathy; the portraits are like grotesques or cameos, chiseled in ice.

How M. Vanderem loves to render his lovers ridiculous! The dandy Gerald, the lover of the exquisite Zozé, is possessed of a certain amount of "natural acrobatic talent," and, in an interlude of love-making, M. Vanderem watches him exercise it:

> While he listened to Zozé he stretched his limbs by walking round the room on his hands, his legs bent back and his feet hanging over his neck. When she had finished her story he turned a somersault, slipped his arms behind his knees, and, in that uncomfortable position, took a few frog-like jumps. Then he straightened himself up smartly and asked:
> "Well, then, are you going to engage this mummy merchant?"

The "mummy merchant" is no less a person than M. Raindal, member of the Institute and the author of a book on Cleopatra which has set all Paris talking. The titled ladies crowd his lectures, eager to gather whatever succulent details may fall from the master's lips concerning those episodes in Cleopatra's life buried in the old Latin footnotes of the master's book. Mme. Chambannes, Zozé, obeys a whim to add M. Raindal to her collection of celebrities and it is the elderly savant's capitulation to her seductiveness that furnishes the central motif in the story. The long-immured Raindal, steeped in archaeology and asceticism, courts disaster by his attendance on the young coquette. His misery when he is finally disillusioned enlists whatever sympathy the novelist has at his command:

> Poor thinker, poor master, poor man! Yes, he could indeed call to his help the spectacle of the heavens, the astronomers and the philosophers; he could call on Newton, Laplace, Kant and Hegel! • • • The fact remained that he still harbored within his own breast an atom of flesh which was more sensitive and real than all those vaunted infinities which were powerless alike to cure him and to dominate him.

It is M. Raindal's brother, Cyprien, however, who furnishes the final exemplification of the author's irony. Cyprien is a disappointed official, a violent anti-Semite, constantly raging against Jews. Nevertheless his best friend, M. Schliefmann, is a Jew who deprecates what he considers the departure of his race from the high mission for which it was destined. Cyprien falls a victim to a cabal of money-lenders through his own greed, and when he is dying it is Schliefmann who bends over his body, muttering Hebrew prayers. In all, the book is an admirable tour de force, appealing in its way—if you are fond of dry point.

"SAME OLD BILL!"

SAME OLD BILL, EH, MABLE! By Edward Streeter. Illustrated by G. William Breck. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company.

IN the United States almost every war has bred its humorist sometimes more than one, who has made a distinct contribution to the humorous literature of the country, Lieutenant Streeter with his three books, "Dere Mable," "That's Me All Over, Mable," and now this new one, has established himself as the humorist of our share in the world war. His Buck Private, Bill Smith, in his letters to Mable has now chronicled the experiences of his entire service, from the day of his induction into the army until the day of sailing homeward from France, and the three little volumes make a story of the war from the viewpoint of the man in the ranks that is not only a valuable addition to American literature of humor, but is also a phase of the great, many-sided war story that is worth having—quite as much worth having, in fact, as some of the highly intellectual, deadly earnest, historical accounts that have been or will be written.

It is in truth the "same old Bill," with whom more than half a million readers are already familiar, who writes about what he did and saw in France. The last previous book ended with Bill's letters from the troop transport as it neared its destination in France. This new one begins with his first letter from that country. He is disappointed that they are not at once sent to the front and a little disgusted that they have "to go to school agen to learn something." "If I had a diploma for every school I been to in the last year," he writes to Mable, "my room would look like a dentle parlor." And those who know something about the way the army was trained, its men and its officers and its scores of kinds of specialists, will note the comment as a profound observation about America's intensive preparation for war. He has his troubles with the language, although he has rather a good opinion of himself in that line, and his attempt to translate French words into English sounds and then to explain their meaning to Mable is among the funniest things in the book. He meets "C'est la guerre" early in his French experience and his version to Mable is "Sailor Gare," and, he tells her, "That's some old pirate they blame everything on over here."

Bill's attitude toward whatever happens is that of the typical, good-natured, robust young American, and that is why the humor of his letters is so racy and so appealing. Whatever the hardships and discomforts, his grumbling is whimsical, his descriptions grotesque, and his laughter irresistible. Whenever he meets anything that he doesn't understand, whether it is French customs or the reason for an army order, he makes light of it, talks all around it, and gives it whimsical and absurd interpretation. So long is he reaching the front that he decides that "The worst part of the war is gettin to it." He has no love for the horses of his battery—he is in the artillery—and he tells Mable in a moment of particular disgust with their temperaments: "The more I see of horses the more I want to meet the fello that wrote 'Black Beauty.'" He is not above impressing Mable with the dangers to which he is exposed, although he is constantly, except when he wants to arouse her sympathy, belittling them and describing them with sarcasm or grotesque similes. When he gets lost from his unit, having gone over the top on a special assignment with the infantry, and is wandering around in the woods with "a lot of things flyin' round my head that aint in no bird book," it occurs to him that, "havin' lost the Lootenant and the Major, I ought to go back to my battery. Duty before pleasure. That's me all over, Mable." He sends directions to Mable as to what picture of him to use "in case anything happens like my gettin' killed or such," and adds: "An' when the reporters call for details remember the skies the limit." He sees much service at the front and marches with the Army of Occupation into Germany. And one of his many comments on German customs is this: "I bet the greatest hardship the German Army had was sleepin' outdoors for four years."

Bill has heard all about what is expected of the returning army in the way of being "changed men," but he is skeptical, except that "Perhaps I've gotten a little stouter." "Even the Captin," he tells Mable, "was sayin' to me the other day: 'Smith, I can't see any difference in you since the first day you came into the army.'" He has a difficult time trying to tell Mable how he feels when at last they are about to embark for home. "Of course," he says, "I want to go home. That's all I've wanted to do since November. At the same time I feel kind of sad like you do when your comin' back to work from your Summer vacashun."

Compared with the Petroleum V. Nasby letters and the Bigelow papers, which furnished the humorous treatment of the civil war and the war with Mexico, Bill's letters indicate a curious evolution of the more genial, closer to the mass. Purely national spirit. For they are younger, personal in viewpoint and purpose, they make no attempt to follow in the footsteps of their two distinguished predecessors and flay any cause, personality, motive, or method with satire, irony, or sarcasm. Perhaps they are indicative of the advance of democracy, for it was Bill Smith, Buck Private, by the hundreds of thousands in all the armies, who fought this war. He knows it, and this is His Book.

THE GOLDEN ROPE

THE GOLDEN ROPE. By J. W. Brodie-Innes. John Lane Company.

This story by J. W. Brodie-Innes contains all the elements of a good, old-fashioned romance of love and mystery and murder. There is in it a delightfully spooky old castle, full of loopholes and oubliettes and dungeons and secret hiding places, while its owner is a remarkably beautiful woman called "the Fatal Countess," who has strange lapses of memory, periods during which she is herself entirely ignorant of what she does. The heiress of vast estates and unbounded wealth, she has many enemies who wish to possess themselves of her fortune, and most of these enemies are more or less important persons at the Court of Vienna, where, however, the old Emperor, Francis Joseph, is her firm friend. She has other friends, too, of whom three are prominent in the narrative—a lovely and intelligent young girl, a brilliantly clever young man, ingenious and resourceful, and the elderly painter who tells the story. In short, the tale ought to be a real "thriller," and for a time it promises to become one. Unfortunately, the author grows so interested in the elderly painter and his love story that he pays only a perfunctory sort of attention to the really fascinating castle, and the promised excitements and complications presently peter out to a conclusion which seems brought about more by the author's wish to make an end to the tale than by any development of events. It is a good deal of a disappointment, for that castle was certainly worthy of more interest and a less loosely woven tale.

SILVER AND GOLD

SILVER AND GOLD. By Dane Coolidge. E. P. Dutton & Co.

If Denver Russell had only been endowed with a more skeptical disposition he might have been saved some trouble, and a good deal of unnecessary worry. As it was he gave complete and utter credence to the prophecy of the old Cornish woman, Mother Trigedgo, and did his best to observe its various and somewhat obscure warnings. But he was a miner, his thoughts were centred altogether on mines and mining, and the result of this concentration was that he made a very grievous mistake, though, of course, it all came right in the end.

The scene of the story is laid in the Far West, near what had once been a famous silver mine. When Denver Russell arrived with a small sum of money he had no difficulty whatever in buying a claim in the shadow of the great cliff called Apache Leap, not far from the "Lost Burro." Old Bunker Hill, the man who sold it to him, and who owned several claims on which he had done little or no work, was also the possessor of a beautiful daughter, Drusilla, a maiden with wonderful golden hair, a voice which justified her in aspiring to a career in grand opera, and an entire lack of hesitation when it came to letting Denver see her liking for him. Of course Denver fell in love with her, and this despite the fact that her father was afflicted with a veritable mania for telling stories and anecdotes on every possible occasion. As might be expected, a rich and influential crook did his best to get hold of Denver Russell's mine, but his nefarious machinations were presently defeated, and love and virtue triumphed all along the line.

OFF DUTY

OFF DUTY. Compiled by Wilhelmina Harper. The Century Company.

Miss Wilhelmina Harper, the compiler of this volume, was during the war assistant librarian at the Naval Training Station at Pelham Bay Park. In a brief preface she states that through her work there she discovered "a distinct need for some collection of the best short stories, especially adapted" to please the tastes of men. Consequently, she presents this book as such a collection, though opinions will probably differ as to whether it does or does not agree with the suggested specifications.

Whatever else one may think of Miss—or is it Mrs.?—Harper's selections, it is impossible to deny that they are exceedingly varied. In the matter of dates, they range from Bret Harte's "Outcasts of Poker Flat" to Edna Ferber's very modern tale of "The Gay Old Dog," and in type from Stewart Edward White's Western hold-up story "Billy's Tenderfoot," to Oscar Wilde's exquisite fantasy "The Nightingale and the Rose." As might be expected in a volume of this description, there is an O. Henry story, "The Handbook of Hymen"—amusing and clever, but scarcely to be accounted one of his best. The book contains a dozen stories by as many authors, W. D. Howells, Rex Beach and Hamlin Garland being among those not already mentioned.

A JAPANESE VIEW OF JAPAN AND WORLD PEACE

JAPAN AND WORLD PEACE. By K. K. Kawakami. New York: The Macmillan Company.

WITH the attitude of Japan toward China, the question of the cession of German possessory rights in the Shantung Peninsula, and the refusal of the Chinese delegates to the Peace Conference to sign the treaty proving to be potent centres of discord, anything that will throw light upon the problems involved becomes of immediate consequence. Mr. Kawakami's book, because it is so well informed and so clearly presented, is therefore of the greatest timeliness and deserves the careful reading of all who wish to understand the questions at issue. The author has lived in the United States for a score of years or more and has many interests here. But he has kept in close touch with his native land, has made occasional visits there, and two years ago he spent several months investigating conditions in China. He is American correspondent for Japanese newspapers and has made it his lifework to interpret the two countries to each other and to promote understanding and good feeling between them.

Of particular interest is Mr. Kawakami's account of China as he found it two years ago and as events have since developed. For Japan's attitude toward her southern neighbor, according to his exposition, depends largely upon what China can do for herself. And present conditions in that hapless land he pictures as being even worse than they are in Mexico. He says that the country has become merely an agglomeration of disjected members, with the leaders in the several provinces each bent on nothing but personal gain, the sections warring against one another, no teamwork to be found anywhere, the Government a republic in name only but really a "military despotism of the worst form," commercial and industrial life in a chaotic condition and the people suffering in consequence. He explains that Japan's keen interest in this situation is parallel to that of the United States in Mexico, but that it is of much more consequence to her because she is a smaller country than this and China much larger and richer than Mexico and more attractive to other nations, while Japan has no Monroe Doctrine with which to protect herself, and, therefore, the menacing situation has produced the greatest anxiety and apprehension among the Nipponese. He makes some disclosures concerning China's entrance into the war that are very discreditable to that country and explain why Japan exerted some pressure to prevent her neighbor from lining up with Germany, as he says she would have done had she come in at an earlier date. There is an extensive exposition of Japan's railway concessions in Shantung, and the author patiently calls attention to the fact that Japan's rights in Kiao-chau are only what she won by force of arms from Germany and that she has promised to restore these to China.

There is much in the book of equal interest to this discussion of the relations between Japan and China, for there are chapters on Japan and the Pacific Islands, Japan and Siberia, and Japan's relation to the war and to the proposed League of Nations, as well as on the reciprocal relations between America and Japan. No sanely minded American fails to see the mischievousness of the persistent anti-Japanese propaganda that goes on in the United States. A good deal of it during the last dozen years or more has doubtless been a part of the busy German spinning whose aim was to make as much trouble for other nations as possible. Unscrupulous demagogues among our own politicians have been responsible for more, much of it of a very ridiculous sort. And the rest can be laid at the door of that panic fear and that instinct for believing the worse rather than the better things that are characteristic of average human nature. It is deplorable that all these things get printed and voiced so continuously, while so little is heard on the other side that by their very clamor they may yet produce wholly unnecessary evils. In the midst of all these noisy alarums Mr. Kawakami has raised every now and then in his several books a clear and patient voice inviting American readers to listen for a moment to a calm presentation of the issues involved and of how they look to the Japanese. That is what he does in this volume, in which a good many pages are devoted to showing how absurd some of these wild alarums have been.

In some respects, however, this book seems a little less frank, a little less judicial in tone, than have been his previous works. The chapter on Japan in Siberia, for instance, while it discusses with apparent sincerity the share Japan has taken in the allied sending of troops to that country, does not even mention the rapid extension of that share far beyond the part taken by our own and other nations, until the matter became so grave that it called out American protest and resulted in a change in the Japanese Government with the peace and democratic party coming into power and reversing Japan's previous apparent purpose in Siberia. There are other instances also in which the discriminating reader will need to make due allowance for the author's point of view. It must be admitted, however, that in some cases, notably that of Japan's pressing of her "twenty-one demands" upon China four years ago, he does not spare the rod for his native land. His account of the progress of democracy in Japan deserves study, while his exposition of the overturning last Winter of the war party and of the triumph of the party of peace and democracy with Takashi Hara, "the commoner of Japan," at its head, and of the serious economic necessities the country faces, all deal with matters the people of the United States ought to know much more about than most of them do before they join in perfervid attacks upon Japan and the Japanese.

MEDICAL SURGERY

MEDICAL AND SURGICAL DEVELOPMENTS OF THE WAR. By William Seaman Bainbridge, Lieutenant Commander, M. C., U. S. N. R. F. Washington: Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office.

DR. BAINBRIDGE'S report is the best of the kind that has appeared and is issued as a special number of the United States Naval Medical Bulletin, for the information of the service. For the civilian, professional, or layman, its illuminating text and profuse illustrations tell a story of the attempt to secure by co-ordinated scientific effort "something of the triumphant result that wrought an end to the war through unity of command." No one can turn these pages without learning to respect the heroes in hospitals, the strategy of antisepsis and asepsis, the battles not to destroy but to save life and limb, the conquest of crippling wounds, the miracle of the mask.

With a gesture as courtly as Pershing's at the great Frenchman's tomb—"Lafayette, we are here"—the New York surgeon also finds his precedent and pays his homage to the past:

> After visits to the front and observing much of primary and delayed suture, I determined to secure the memoirs of Paré and the life of Larrey, with a view to learning if any of the modern war wound treatments was foreshadowed by those two great surgeons who, many years ago, fought over Northern France and Flanders much as we were now doing. • • •
> There, in the last of the sixteenth century, was described immediate closure; and in the days of Napoleon, molded splints and early primary amputation, much as we know them today, except for the phraseology of the time.

He quotes the quaint words of Ambrose Paré, father of French surgery, on wounds made by gunshot and "other fiery engines," and later from Baron Larrey, Surgeon in Chief of the first Napoleon's Grand Armée:

> It is interesting to note that he was nominated surgeon of the Royal Navy in 1787 and took part in a cruising expedition to American waters. Practically the identical words which, in the present war, have been pronounced in connection with the progressive danger of infection of all war wounds were spoken a century ago by Larrey, in commenting upon the utility of immediate amputations: An hour's delay is often responsible for the death of the patient.

This is doubly interesting and remarkable in view of the fact that a large part of Larrey's work was done on Flemish soil, made familiar to us by the events of the world war; for we read of his being sent to Louvain and Brussels, or of his visiting the military hospitals of Great Britain, like contemporaneous army surgeons. The brilliant career of Baron Larrey brings us close to the present day, when war surgery has perhaps reached its zenith, the operator standing at the head of the medical profession just as the man in uniform represents the dominating factor in both the Eastern and Western Hemispheres.

Lieut. Commander Bainbridge, pursuant to instructions of the Surgeon General of the Navy, made observations on the western front and in England during December, 1917, and the first six months of 1918. For purposes of comparison, his report includes certain data obtained by him while in Germany in the Summer and Autumn of 1915:

> It may be of interest to point out two contrasts which must strike forcibly any one who is conversant with the facts. The one contrast lies between the marvelous efficiency of Germany at the outbreak of the war and the conditions, best described as chaotic, which existed at that time among the Allies. The other contrast, more gratifying to us, is shown when we compare these same conditions with the truly wonderful improvement to be found later on the side of the Allies.

Far from mere generalities, the 250-page report after ten pages gets down to facts and cases. On Page 23 is "one of Dr. Carrel's cases," a large shell wound traversing the anterior aspect of the thigh; at the end of seven days "the patient walked normally." Facing Page 38 is a foot gashed by shell splinter April 29; the soldier on July 25 "walked without a cane." Then there are the "masks":

> The ancient Hindus, to whom so many wonderful achievements are popularly attributed, are credited with having performed plastic operations 2,000 years ago. Doubtless this was brought about by reason of the fact that a popular form of punishment was the cutting off of the nose. The tilemakers, who are reputed to have been a more or less despised class, delegated to themselves the task of nose mending. Presumably the thought came to these artisans as a result of their familiarity with cements and repairs calling for the adhesion of one substance to another.
> Modern warfare has resulted in much deformity, especially horrible when the head and face are involved, and it is to plastic surgery that all are hopefully looking for relief for those who have suffered such injury. The injury may be slight and only of cosmetic interest, or so great as to endanger life. Between these two extremes there is a multitude of unfortunates who must have repair work performed before they can go back either to the fighting force or to civil life and be economically self-sustaining.

Much of this remarkable and important work, Dr. Bainbridge says, is hardly known as yet on this side of the Atlantic. He tells elsewhere the kindly advice of a British surgeon:

> You in America will want to get your convalescent cases home. It is better to have them among their own people, better for the men, and good for the community to care for them and see the actual evidence of the war.

Re-education of the cripple, Dr. Bainbridge says, must begin before even the wounds have healed and habits of helplessness formed. "There is not much more to be done with a broken spirit," he exclaims, "than with a broken back."

There are pictures from France of an underground dressing station, a hospital in a church, tributes in Paris to the inspiring examples of French activity, assisted largely by American money, and everywhere to the good work by both our army and navy in adapting antiquated buildings, convents, monasteries, barracks, and schools to the needs of the American forces.

To the American an interesting fact was that Dr. Tuffier, without uniform or military rank, "went about Paris with all the power and receiving all the deference due a high officer." Dr. Chutro, also in mufti, was chief surgeon to one of the large military hospitals there. Dr. Tuffier said frankly, "I can do better work, I am freer, and can more safely give advice than I could with a uniform."

The report embraces a vast array of the war's undoing of men. Dr. Bainbridge bows to the military viewpoint that the soldier hurt slightly must first be saved to the army, but he confesses the gravely wounded "make more profound appeal to our sympathy, and they gratify our professional pride."

It seemed to him that "nothing has been left undone to aid the men in the service and the great cause of humanity," including the service of "an earnest, understanding, tireless civilian army"—the welfare organizations—who were "seeking to serve in new and more helpful ways and to furnish everything that would make for efficiency, comfort, and mental and physical happiness," to win the war and establish a permanent peace.

As to after-war changes, "the teaching possibilities of war hospitals are practically unlimited, and it is not only desirable but imperative that such facilities be utilized to the fullest possible extent, aside from other considerations, for the reason that the exodus in search of higher professional education on the part of medical students and post-graduates is probably largely a thing of the past. 'The old order changeth,' making place for the new."

Rupert Hughes said:

"I consider 'The Branding Iron' an extraordinarily strong novel and the central woman character a memorable figure. I think Mrs. Burt has a remarkable gift, and I hope her first novel may have great success."

WHY is it that the business of the bookseller in this country today as compared with the same business half a century ago has declined at such a rate that in many localities it may be said to have disappeared altogether? Fifty years ago, for instance, Poughkeepsie, with a population of 20,000, maintained three bookstores, all doing a thriving business on the city's principal street; today, with a population of 30,000, the largest book business in Poughkeepsie is done by a small store, run by a man and his wife, on a side street. A few years ago, we are told, Des Moines "had a distinguished bookstore, which was an object of civic pride and the admiration of all Iowa—today the proprietors have given up the sale of books and deal in stationery only, while two department stores, with inadequate stocks of books, supply the reading public." Similar changes are noted in such cities as Albany, Troy, Schenectady, New Bedford, Boston, Baltimore, and in still larger municipalities, all indicating that the old-time activities of the bookseller in this country are dwindling so rapidly, in spite of the increase in population, that this particular line of business would seem to be threatened with extinction. The facts in the case and the conditions that have theoretically brought them about are set forth and discussed in an article on "The Welfare of the Bookstore," by WILLIAM HARRIS ARNOLD, appearing in the August number of the Atlantic Monthly. Mr. ARNOLD has spent the forty-seven years of his business life in the "retailing, wholesaling or publishing of books," and is thus able to take a comprehensive as well as a practical view of the subject.

THAT the number of bookstores in this country is decreasing is a fact, of course, others have noted before Mr. ARNOLD pointed it out. But the subject is handled by him with exceptional thoroughness, and the reader is not told, as he usually has been in former articles of this kind, that bookselling has declined on account of the growing popularity of movies and automobiles, or of the multiplication of literary periodicals and public libraries. On the contrary, Mr. ARNOLD finds that public libraries create new markets for booksellers, while the vogue of the movies and automobiles is much too recent to account for the downward tendency in a business that was in a comparatively flourishing condition fifty years ago. This same falling off in the prosperity of the bookstore throughout the United States is to be found, by the way, in Great Britain and Ireland, while the reverse of this condition exists in the Western Continental countries of Europe. Thus, for fifty years or more, "the business of both branches of the trade has been generally satisfactory in Norway, Sweden, and Denmark; Holland and Belgium; France, Switzerland, and Italy; Germany, Austria and Hungary; Spain and Portugal." One hears with surprise, indeed, that "in normal times the number of books published in each of these countries is much larger in proportion to the population than in the United States, and a wide distribution of these books is obtained." Thus, "in all Scandinavia and Denmark there is no town of 10,000 inhabitants without a bookstore," a condition that might at least have been approximated in the United States half a century ago, but certainly does not exist here now.

IT is from a study of this exceptional prosperity of the bookstore in Western Continental Europe as compared with its precarious condition in Great Britain and the United States that Mr. ARNOLD reaches his solution of the problem he has set for himself. The trouble, he finds, is due not so much to the British and American reading publics as it is to a certain lack of co-operation between publisher and bookseller in these countries. Here the bookseller, owing to present business usage in the matter, may suffer ruinously through the speculative quality of many of the new books that he is compelled to handle. This risk, however, is minimized in the case of the bookseller of Continental Europe, who is practically backed in his undertakings along these lines, it seems, by the publisher. On account of this co-operative arrangement Mr. ARNOLD sees greatly increased activity in the business of bookselling and a corresponding improvement in character of the new books that are offered for sale. Whether or not his theory regarding the declining bookstore in the United States is correct, this roseate picture that he draws of what would follow a change in conditions is interesting and carries with it a well-merited rebuke, certainly, for some of the new books that are indiscriminately chosen and published every season:

> The adventurer in the publishing field who often tries, and often with success, to foist books of doubtful merit on a too-trustful market will find increasing difficulty in experiencing his propensities; the conscientious publisher, with fuller responsibilities, will become more and more discriminating as to the quality of the material he selects for publication; the author will be less tempted to submit indifferent productions; the public will gain new confidence in both publisher and bookseller; enterprising young men and women who find a congenial atmosphere in the bookstore will be encouraged to enter the bookselling field; new bookstores will soon be opened where none exist; and, as such stores are the best possible advertisements, many people who are now unmindful of the delights of reading will frequently have their attention drawn to books; before long, places for the sale of books will be as numerous as in those countries where the publishers long ago adopted the methods that appear to be essential for successful bookselling.

WRITING in the current Book Monthly on the rôle played by the English tongue in drawing together the democracies under the British flag and the United States, Mr. WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE declares that "while we, of the overseas English world, read British books by the ton, our own books are scarcely known in Great Britain." On account of our omnivorous reading of British books, Mr. WHITE claims that "the streets of London and Canterbury and Manchester and Edinburgh and the lanes of England are as familiar to us of the overseas English-speaking world as our own streets and lanes," while we, on the other hand, "are all unknown to England," and "London, the spiritual capital of our race, is herself insular, provincial, and restricted in her knowledge of us." Without questioning the justice of Mr. WHITE'S attribution of provincialism to London—a failing to which more than one national metropolis is subject—the complaint that American books are not read in England is less easily credible. In times not so long past English critics have accorded recognition to American writers who for years appealed to their own countrymen in vain, a fact attested by the experiences of WHITMAN and POE, while there has always been the heartiest British appreciation for such American writers as EMERSON, HAWTHORNE, LOWELL, LONGFELLOW, COOPER, IRVING, BRYANT. Of the popularity of more recent American writers in England it is difficult to speak with the same certainty. And yet there comes very definite testimony as to the vogue in England of MARK TWAIN, O. HENRY, "Uncle Remus," JACK LONDON, and, in lesser degree, perhaps, of Mrs. WHARTON, Mrs. ATHERTON, Mr. HERGESHEIMER, ERNEST POOLE—all of which modifies considerably Mr. WHITE'S view of what England does and does not know of American literature.

ADVERTISING PROBLEMS

SOLVING ADVERTISING PROBLEMS. Reproductions of and explanatory comments on 250 designs of advertising art which have been unusually successful in helping the sale of a wide variety of merchandise. By Advertising Artists, Inc. New York: Brentano's.

TO those who thrive through advertising, and to others who earnestly wish to qualify themselves to write and illustrate fetching appeals to the public, the exposition this little book makes will be of live interest and substantial service. In it appears a large number of designs, which have been tried and found to be good money makers.

Some of the most successful designs, we are told, did not please the advertisers for whom they were prepared when they were presented for approval, and were not adopted until expert judgment had triumphed over inexpert taste. On the other hand, it is stated that many a brilliant selling idea has been shelved because it did not strike the fancy of the advertiser. The obvious inference is that it probably is the part of wisdom for the advertiser to lean pretty heavily on the specialist he consults with respect to his newspaper, magazine, and poster announcements.

Study of the picture advertisements that have won fame and wealth for American business houses tends to a strengthening of this impression; it is very easy to select from them designs over which it would seem quite a natural thing for contention to have taken place when they were submitted for approval. Probably it is difficult in some instances to persuade the man with something to sell that his best picture is the one that insinuates and artfully suggests the usefulness and value of his article of merchandise.

MR. CREEL ON IRELAND'S FIGHT FOR FREEDOM

system as are the other provinces of Ireland to decide whether they will have home rule. It is clear that they ought to have it. This is admitted by the best English statesmen. It was advocated by the great Irish statesmen Grattan, Burke, Parnell, McCarthy, and Redmond. It has been embodied in an act of Parliament. This act of Parliament has not yet been put into effect because of the controversy over Ulster. It is hard for an American to see any justification for the attempt to compel Ulster to submit to the rule of the other provinces of Ireland, when it is satisfied to remain as it is. Mr. Creel uses some juggling of figures to support his claim that Ulster is not as unanimous on this subject as has been maintained. In doing this he counts together the Nationalist vote and the Sinn Fein vote at the last legislation, but as we all know the Nationalist vote favors home rule but is opposed to secession. The Sinn Feiners are secessionists. Their whole aim is the complete independence of Ireland.

It seems obvious to any fair-minded man who will look at the subject dispassionately that it is impossible for England to concede this. The situation of the two islands is such that if the smaller of the two should come under the control of a foreign power it would be most dangerous, and might be fatal to the independence of England and Scotland.

Books like that under review simply promote a repetition of what Mr. Creel describes as the "tragedy of blunders," and hinder the adoption of a system which would give to Munster, Leinster and Connaught a Parliament similar in powers to the Legislatures of the American States, and therefore with full control of all local matters; possibly with even wider powers, such as the Dominion Parliament possesses.

One other point should be referred to, for it is often presented. Forgetting what he has previously said as to the poverty of Ireland, Mr. Creel goes on to say that "Ireland is paying today to the Exchequer an annual tax revenue of two hundred million dollars." The latest figures accessible are in the new edition of the International Encyclopaedia. According to this the receipts of the Imperial Treasury in taxes from Ireland amounted in 1913 to £10,567,500, and the expenditures in Ireland from the same Treasury amounted to £10,674,000. In addition to this there was paid from that Treasury to local taxation accounts £1,463,000. The revenues from taxation for local purposes, exclusive of the grant from the Imperial Treasury, were £7,411,926 and the expenditure for local purposes was £8,047,392.

It thus appears that the total taxation for that year, which was the last normal year available, was one-quarter the sum stated by Mr. Creel, and the entire amount of it was expended in Ireland, besides a grant from the Imperial Treasury of the amount above stated. It is probable that the taxation in Ireland has increased during the war, as it has in England and America, and it is no doubt the case that a large portion of the sum thus raised has been expended in fighting the battles of freedom for France, Belgium, England, Ireland, and America. Another fact that Mr. Creel omits is that a large part of the Irish tax is raised from the excise on whisky and malt liquors, that more than half of these liquors are exported, and the tax upon them is repaid to the distillers and brewers by the foreign purchaser. That tax nominally comes from Ireland, but in reality the Irish are only the collectors.

Mr. Creel complains bitterly of the compulsion to pay tithes to the Established Church, but this Church was disestablished and the tithes abolished in 1870, of which fact he makes no mention.

A book from Mr. Creel would be incomplete without an attack on what he loves to call "predatory capitalists." These malignant persons, it seems, have not built all the railroads in Ireland that the development of its coal mines requires. Perhaps this is not to be wondered at when they have been attacked with such vehement vituperation. This does not attract the investor. But the reader asks: Why have not the Irish built these roads themselves, if they are needed? There is no law to prevent it.

Finally, Mr. Creel threatens us with the combined Irish vote in America. "Make no doubt that the Irish vote will be a block vote against England and all things English, as long as the Irish question is allowed to persist." This is what the Germans threatened in 1914. The German vote, however, proved not to be a "block vote." The Irish in America are too intelligent and patriotic to unite in a combined attack on our ally and friend, whose heroic devotion and sacrifice combined with France to save us and the world, including Ireland herself, from Prussian domination. Like many other statements in the book this threat defeats its own object and prejudices the cause it was meant to support.

Saint's Progress

The August Atlantic Monthly says:

"One stands wordless and overcome in the presence of a great novel.

"By the synthesis of life and art, the book simply makes a new state of being for the thoughtful. Such a novel must make us utterly impatient of the routine catechism of fiction.

"Not since the 'Old Wives' Tale' has there been so quietly significant an ending as that of Edward Pierson, standing with grains of sand blown against his palms outstretched for help to God."

FINE NEW NOVELS

The Ivory Trail — By Talbot Mundy

THE IVORY TRAIL is a story of hidden treasure in Africa, consisting of two hundred million dollars' worth of ivory tusks. The British Government has hunted high and low for this vast treasure, can't find it, and has offered ten per cent. of its cash value if it can be located. Talbot Mundy took a hunt for it himself, hence the story about it called THE IVORY TRAIL.

SALESMEN.

This advertisement has appeared in The Times on three previous occasions. Each time it has brought me the desired men. One of them has made $613.75 in his first three weeks' work. Another made $100 his first day.

It takes character and forcefulness to gain these results; if you can show me you have the requisite abilities, I have a like opportunity for you.

The men I seek are wanted to start work in a great financial sales organization which needs executive material for quick promotion.

The District Superintendent is personally making this call for men. He will interview the applicants who measure up. He will select the three who show possibility. They will be placed in a branch where immediate commission income is assured.

They will receive special assistance in preparing for the bigger job. They will have constant association with men who have done and are doing big things in big business. They will be given prompt opportunity in executive position with unusual scope for growth and income.

This is the serious effort of a strong, reputable house to secure new blood with which to build. It means real success for those men who get with us. It is worth consideration by the highest type men as to character and determination. Experience in our line is not essential. Write, giving some data of yourself, stating age and phone number. The New York Times:

We are very much pleased with the results obtained from advertising in The New York Times. Satisfactory employes were secured from the advertisements inserted and were found superior to those obtained from advertisements in other New York papers.

We have been using The Times for some time past, exclusively. Our last advertisement brought us 89 answers. We have been able to select all the help we needed, which is remarkable at the present time, when the U. S. Employment Bureau is unable to fill our requirements.

REAL ESTATE WANTED.

WANTED—
A FIRST-CLASS COUNTRY PLACE

If you have a modern, high-class country estate, gentleman's farm or shore front place for sale, worth $50,000 to $300,000, on the shore or inland, between Greenwich and Norwalk, I would like to hear from you. I make a specialty of handling a few high-class country properties at a time, devote my entire attention to them until sold and pay all advertising. This plan achieves much better results than trying to sell any one of several hundred places, not specializing on any. It costs you nothing to list your property; my only charge is my commission when your place is sold. I will not consider a property unless it is in good condition and not excessively valued. Address P. O. Box 757, Stamford, Conn.

Hotel Man of Experience and recognized ability, law graduate, now operating one of the leading New England Resort Hotels patronized by wealthy and exclusive class, having personal following of considerable importance, desires to lease for term of years a thoroughly first-class hotel, which may be either of the resort or all-year order; must be place suitable for entertainment of discriminating people who are able to pay well for proper accommodation. Prefer to negotiate with principals who will be afforded opportunity to investigate record and present success, due to personal efforts.

Forest Hills Gardens

FIFTEEN MINUTES FROM PENN. STATION

LAND is the most secure of all investments, therefore it is called, in contradistinction to other types of investment, REAL ESTATE.

TRANSPORTATION and accessibility are the fundamental principles that enhance the value of REAL ESTATE. Improved transportation has brought Forest Hills Gardens within fifteen minutes of the centre of Manhattan.

BUILDING operations have been resumed. The increased cost of building is offset by the low price of the land. Many people are purchasing plots and having plans prepared. Our belief that prices are staple—even though higher than pre-war prices—is confirmed by the fact that the SAGE FOUNDATION HOMES CO. is at present building 25 houses, costing over three-quarters of a million dollars. We urge upon those contemplating owning a home the early selection of a building site.

THE REAL ESTATE business is in a better position now than at any time since 1907, therefore land prices are sure to increase.

Your Wonderful Opportunity In Florida For Investment

$750 payment gives you 500 orange and grape fruit trees on ten acres.

A life income of $2,500 yearly and more, according to the age of the grove.

Returns in five years will pay for the grove.

The grove increases in value $1,000 each year.

We fence, cultivate, plant, fertilize and take care of your grove for five years without any expense or charge to you. After that we will act as your agent, selling your fruit at market prices, remitting to you the proceeds.

Our orange and grape fruit groves are situated in the very heart of the finest citrus fruit growing section of Florida, at Sebring, a thriving town overlooking beautiful Lake Jackson, where the soil, climate and scenery are not equalled anywhere in the United States.

The thorough responsibility and superior business ability of the officers of the company, who are large fruit growers themselves, have placed the enterprise on a safe, practical and profitable basis.

REMEMBER, AFTER TWO YEARS, IF FOR ANY REASON YOU WANT TO DISPOSE OF YOUR GROVE, WE WILL REFUND ALL THE MONEY YOU HAVE PAID.

COULD WE DO MORE?

If you have any questions to ask, write us or call, and we will gladly answer them. There are a few choice locations to be had, but they won't last long, so let us hear from you now.

You can live in this beautiful country or spend your winters at Sebring. Your profits from the grove will pay all expenses when the grove is fruit bearing. Parties leaving weekly for Florida. It is to your own interest and benefit to investigate what we have.

Syndicate of Capitalists Buys West End Avenue Corner for $1,000,000 Hotel Site.

LAND HELD AT $450,000

Old Dwelling on Site of Peter Stuyvesant's Farm Sold—Sale in the Pennsylvania Zone.

A syndicate of New York capitalists has purchased from the Gramercy Investing Company the former Huyler estate property on the northwest corner of Seventy-second Street and West End Avenue as a site for a $1,000,000 apartment hotel.

The structure is to be erected by the buying syndicate and sold to a well-known New York hotel man when ready for occupancy. Plans for the structure, which will be fifteen stories high, with a roof garden, have been completed by Starrett & Van Vleck.

The site purchased fronts 80 feet on West End Avenue and 115 feet on Seventy-second Street. It is now occupied by private dwellings and was held at $450,000. Cross & Brown negotiated the transaction.

Sisson a mortgage of $29,000 on premises 120 West Seventy-first Street.

BUILDING INDUSTRY CLOSE TO NORMAL

Construction Work Is Being Pushed Despite Constantly Increasing Prices.

MORE APARTMENTS NEEDED

Houses Now Being Built Leased from the Plans—Demand Far Exceeds Present and Future Supply.

By F. T. MILLER,
Formerly Director of Division of Public Works and Construction Development of U. S. Department of Labor.

A comparison of the building contracts awarded from month to month indicates that the building industry is now running considerably above normal in dollars, and probably at least normal in cubic footage.

The prices of building materials are following the trend of all commodities upward, but might be halted somewhat by the lifting of the war freight rates. During the war the freight rates on building materials were on the average increased 50 per cent., while the rates on all other commodities were increased but 25 per cent.

Owing to the large amount and weight of building freight involved, this increase of double that on general commodities has had a marked effect on the cost of building. There are still 184,000 empty freight cars which, if brought into use, might reduce the price of building materials, and at the same time reduce the deficit of the Railroad Administration.

Legislation such as House Bill No. 5,218, which proposes to put an import duty of $25 a ton on magnesite, and would thus raise the cost of magnesite brick and boiler and pipe covering, and also raise the price of monolithic flooring to a prohibitive figure, should be avoided, for however desirable it may be to encourage our mining and chemical industries it is more vital at the present time to keep down construction costs.

Labor for building purposes is becoming scarce, but probably the elimination of the jurisdictional strike through the recently organized Arbitration Board, composed of members of the American Federation of Labor, American Institute of Architects, Engineers, and Contractors, should reduce the cost of building somewhat, for it is said that 95 per cent. of labor troubles in the building industry and 75 per cent. of the days of idleness have been due to jurisdictional strikes, and not to controversy between employer and employe as to wages.

The housing shortage is likely to be more seriously felt in the Fall. A bill providing for a Bureau of Research and Investigation on housing and building subjects has been introduced into Congress during the past week, and should have the support of those who believe that the building industry as a whole should have in Washington some sort of a clearing house of general and scientific information.

There is a great need for concentrating efforts on building in the direction of housing and all industrial plants producing needed commodities in order to lower commodity prices through increased production. Monumental buildings, libraries, and public construction, which do not have immediate earning capacity, might well be temporarily deferred, not only in order to avoid additional taxation not immediately necessary, but also to prevent competition for labor and materials required for more necessary construction.

The public is coming to a realizing sense that land, a most secure investment, is still selling at pre-war levels, and is bound to follow the world's price tendency upward.

The natural tendency of the Federal Reserve System is to draw banking facilities toward short-term loans and away from real estate loans, and immediate consideration, therefore, of the Calder Bill No. S-1469, and the Nolan Bill No. H. R.-6371, which are the first steps in the direction of liquefying real estate mortgages, are of public concern. It is to be hoped that the Senate Committee on Finance and Currency will appoint a sub-committee to give the whole subject of real estate banking most thorough consideration.

The Federal Reserve Board, in a statement to the press July 14, sounds a timely note of warning as to overdoing export business.

It notes that "the export situation is possibly of most direct importance to the domestic consumer in a way that is very frequently overlooked. This is in connection with prices. There is a shortage of many essential materials and commodities in the world at large. Increased credit demand for goods for export necessarily implies relatively decreased supply of goods for domestic use. Demand and supply are automatically equalized by changes in price, but such changes in price are, in the circumstances here under consideration, necessarily upward. The domestic consumer, therefore, when asked to finance export trade, should remember that the outstanding effect of such financing upon too great a scale would necessarily be the exaggeration of the prices which he himself must pay for the things he needs. This necessarily means, therefore, that he is in a sense bidding against himself when he enables others to purchase overfreely with the funds which he has supplied."

The demand for capital in the United States for the purpose of increasing production and building and the soundness of domestic security offered should, in the very near future, for reasons of self-interest in national welfare, turn the eyes of bankers and investors toward domestic rather than foreign activities.

It is probable that it will take several years to make up the shortage of building. Interesting conclusions have lately been drawn from a comparison of the building permit records of New York City during the war period from 1914 to 1918—with the normal period of the ten years preceding, that is, from 1905 to 1914. Had 16,000 additional permits been issued during the war period, it would have only brought the figure up to the annual average during the normal ten years.

The average valuation of permits during the ten years from 1905 to 1914 was $18,000, so that it would require, to bring the city up to the normal building as indicated by its growth during the ten years prior to the war, an expenditure of 18,000 times 16,000 permits, or $288,000,000. Owing to the increased cost of building, however, it is probable that $480,000,000 will be required instead.

July Building Figures.

July activity closely parallels June activity as indicated by comparing building permit statistics for the two months. Reports from 145 cities to the American Contractor for July give a total estimated valuation of $130,746,609, an average of approximately $900,000 per city. June totals from 158 cities indicated a $134,726,715 valuation, or slightly less than $90,000 per city ($85,270).

ACTIVITY IN QUEENS.

Building Bureau Reports Many Plans Filed.

Queens building operations have developed an activity heretofore unknown even in the most prosperous pre-war times. The features of the situation are the erection of a group of important factory buildings in Long Island City to cost over $3,300,000, and increased activity among builders of dwellings. The activity is shown by the filings this week at the Queens Building Bureau.

Ballinger & Perret have prepared the plans for four of the factories, work on two of which has already started. The American Chicle Company factory has been started on the block bounded by Thomson Avenue, Nelson Avenue, Manley, and Mount Streets. It will be 200 by 600, six stories, of concrete, and will cost $2,000,000. The plant for the Patterson & Sargent Paint Company has also been started at Van Dam and Hunters Point Avenues, consisting of two units, 40 by 109 and 80 by 150, to cost $230,000. Plans are now prepared for the J. N. Courtage Company, Inc., adjacent to the Payntar Building, on the south side of Jackson Avenue, at the Queensboro Bridge Plaza, to cost $300,000, and for the plant of the Sawyer Biscuit Company at Nelson and Mount Streets, four stories, 200 by 350, to cost $500,000. S. Blickman has filed plans for a factory, six stories, 200 by 134, Nelson, Manley, and Mount Streets, to cost $350,000.

James Hartman will erect a brick theatre, 81 by 140, at Jamaica and Boyd Avenues, Woodhaven, at a cost of $75,000.

The William R. Gibson Company will erect twenty-six one-family frame dwellings, on 109th Street, South Richmond Hill, to cost $105,000.

NEW BRONX APARTMENTS.

Fifty-four Structures Planned to House 1,620 Families.

In January of the present year, at a time when, except to the extreme optimist, there seemed but little probability of an early resumption of building activity anywhere, Eugene H. Rosenquest, former President of the Bronx Board of Trade, expressed the positive opinion that before the Summer was well under way there would be an unmistakable and strong revival of building activities in the Borough of the Bronx, especially in the building of homes.

Any such prediction as to the 1919 building construction outlook seemed groundless, especially in view of the fact that during the whole of the year just closed, 1918, the sum total of the costs of all the new buildings for which plans had been filed had amounted to but $3,991,900, an almost insignificant figure for the Bronx.

Fulfillment of the January prophecy as to this early building revival in the Bronx is furnished by an inspection of the records of the Building Bureau of the borough, which show that, in the six months ending June 30, 224 plans were filed for 311 new structures, at total estimated costs amounting to $7,325,490, nearly twice as much as was involved in new buildings during the entire year 1918.

Moreover, a study of the numbers of plans filed has demonstrated a steady monthly increase in volume, ten in January, for $184,940; nineteen in February, for $248,900; twenty-one in March, for $353,350; fifty-eight in April, for $2,154,500; fifty-three in May, for $1,798,050; sixty-three in June, for $2,785,700.

The fifty-four apartment houses concerned are planned to accommodate 1,620 families, while the 104 one, two and three-family houses, will take care of approximately 150 families, making for new housing for a total of 1,770 families now under way in the Bronx.

MORTGAGE TAX RECEIPTS.

New York County Benefits to Extent of About $385,590.26.

State Tax Commissioners Walter H. Knapp, John J. Merrill and Michael J. Walsh made public last week the report of the Mortgage Tax Bureau of the New York State Tax Department, showing a very large increase in the amount of mortgage taxes received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, as compared with June 30, 1918.

According to the Mortgage Tax Law, a tax of one-half of one per cent. is imposed upon the principal of each mortgage recorded. This tax, which is paid over by recording officers to the County Treasurer, is divided equally between the State and the locality where the mortgaged property is situated. In New York County 3,490 mortgages were recorded, and through the operations of this law this county will benefit in the year 1919 to the extent of about $385,590.26. The number of mortgages recorded in and the benefits derived by the Kings, Queens, Bronx, and Richmond Counties follow: Kings, 22,800, $291,647.75; Queens, 9,197, $62,980.15; Richmond, 1,813, $321.08; Bronx, 2,840, $46,980.56.

The amount received in 1919 is about $2,600,000, an increase of $830,000, or nearly fifty per cent. over the receipts of 1918, with a smaller expense of collection. The increase in New York City alone amounted to nearly $750,000. The number of mortgages recorded in the State increased from 81,455 to 100,848, more than one-half of this increase being in the Borough of Kings, New York City. Prohibition against the putting up of new structures during the war accounts for the lack of activity in real estate transactions, and nearly all of the increase shown has occurred during the first six months of the present year.

CARMEN NOW SEEK TO UNIONIZE MEN IN MANHATTAN LINES

Union Leaders Confer with Representatives of New York Surface Roads.

MAY MAKE DEMANDS SOON

Expect Easy Task in Organizing Red and Green Employes After Success in Brooklyn.

B. R. T. RESUMES SERVICE

All Branches of System in Normal Operation Before Close of Sunday.

Before service on the Brooklyn Rapid Transit lines had been completely restored, after the settlement of the four-day strike on Saturday, Patrick P. Shea, the director of the strike, and Louis Fridiger, counsel for the strikers, yesterday began to make plans to organize the employes of the surface lines in Manhattan and to lay demands on their behalf before Job E. Hedges, Receiver for the lines of the New York Railways Company.

Leaders of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, who have been conferring with delegates of the Manhattan surface line employes intimated that they might ask for a meeting with Mr. Hedges today. Mr. Shea and Mr. Fridiger consulted yesterday at the Hotel Continental with several delegates of the Red and Green lines, whose employes became restive during the Brooklyn strike.

The success of the strike led the leaders to believe they will find it easy to organize the Manhattan lines. That the subway and elevated lines might be affected, despite the good relations between the Interborough and its employes since the formation of an independent organization of local employes, was indicated by the advertising of the Interborough, frankly facing the possibility of a strike, and making the labor situation an added argument for an increase in fares. Employes of the Interborough are under contracts lasting until the end of this year.

The Public Service Commission is watching the situation in Manhattan closely in the hope that any threatened strike may be headed off by mediation in advance. Public Service Commissioner Lewis Nixon, who worked out the plan on which the B. R. T. strike was settled, said he would offer mediation if difficulty should arise in Manhattan, but that he had heard of no demands or threats by surface line employes or their representatives.

Mr. Fridiger, who presented the case for the B. R. T. strikers before Federal Judge Mayer Saturday and signed the treaty ending the strike, admitted having consulted with representatives of the Red and Green employes, but refused to say what plans had been made.

It was asserted that the men wanted to join the Amalgamated Association. Questioned regarding the program of the union, he replied:

"It is too early yet to say anything."

He was asked if he had prepared any demands to present to Mr. Hedges. He said:

"Not today. Tomorrow is another day."

Mr. Shea also refused to discuss his plans.

"We have won one great victory," he said, "and there are lots of details regarding it still to be settled. We want some sleep before other matters are considered."

Service over the B. R. T. lines was about 95 per cent. of normal for Sunday in the morning and 100 per cent. through the afternoon. A few men failed to return early in the morning because they did not learn Saturday night that the strike was over.

The men were highly satisfied with the partial recognition accorded to the union and with the agreement to arbitrate the other demands. Car crews received congratulations from passengers on the success of the strike, and, in turn, expressed delight at being back at work. Motor trucks and buses, which had filled the streets during the four days, disappeared as suddenly as they had assembled.

It was said that it might be several days before proofs were submitted to Judge Mayer that 50 per cent. or more of the B. R. T. employes were members of the union and that discussion of their grievances between a committee of their representatives and Lindley M. Garrison, the receiver, would begin then.

REPUBLICANS REFUSE TO HURRY ON TREATY

No End of the Foreign Relations Committee's Deliberation Is Yet in Sight.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The peace treaty and League of Nations are not to go into eclipse in the Senate this week because of interest in the cost of living.

Senator Lodge will deliver Tuesday an analysis of international problems and other speeches are to follow.

Secretary Lansing will resume tomorrow his testimony on the peace negotiations and related subjects before the Foreign Relations Committee. He will probably read a prepared statement on the negotiation of the Lansing-Ishii agreement, which defined Japan's special interest in China and reaffirmed the "open door" policy. The committee also expects to receive a communication from President Wilson in response to requests for data and documents on the negotiations at Paris.

Republican leaders said today that the end of the committee's deliberations on the treaty was not in sight, despite the demands for early ratification as a means of insuring peace and aiding in the solution of living cost problems. Some Republicans are insisting that no action be taken on the treaty until Colonel E. M. House can appear before the committee.

Proposes Spain Make a Loan to Aid War-Stricken Nations

MADRID, Aug. 10. (Associated Press.)—Alejandro Lerroux, leader of the Radical Party, and a number of fellow members of the Chamber of Deputies have drawn up an amendment in reply to the speech from the throne, asking the Chamber to pass a bill authorizing the Government to raise an international loan of 5,000,000,000 pesetas ($1,000,000,000) at 4½ per cent. The loan is designed to grant loans to France, Germany, and Austria on terms to be fixed by the bill.

It is explained that the proposal is prompted by a wish to assist the stricken nations, which find a return to normal life beset with great financial difficulties, as well as benefit Spain economically.

SEVEN DIE IN FIRE ON SCENIC RAILWAY

Car at Montreal Resort Plunges Into Flames Which Had Started Beneath.

MAY BE MORE VICTIMS

Bodies Burned Beyond Recognition—Flames Spread Rapidly Through Park Buildings.

MONTREAL, Aug. 10.—Seven persons were burned to death tonight in a fire on a scenic railway, at Dominion Park, an amusement resort near this city.

The bodies of three men, three women, and a boy were recovered from the ruins just before midnight. It is feared that several more persons lost their lives. The fire, which not only destroyed part of the Scenic Railway but also the "Mystic Mill" near by, is believed to have been started by a lighted cigarette or match. The flames, fanned by a westerly wind, spread quickly, and only a river, on the banks of which the amusement park is located, checked the fire from spreading to the rest of the resort across the stream.

According to witnesses, a car filled with merrymakers took a fatal leap into the flames.

Coming from the mill could be heard moans of agony and cries for help, but the firemen found it possible to rescue only a few of the men, women and children trapped in the blazing structure. They did succeed, however, in cutting their way through the walls and dragging forth a few persons almost smothered by the smoke.

Two of the bodies were found huddled together in the ruins. The others lay in different parts of the burned building, so badly charred that it is believed identification can be established in only one or two cases, and these by watch charms and rings worn by the victims.

It was a ghastly tragedy. When reports of the fire reached the city thousands of persons hastened to the park, seven miles away, in every manner of conveyance.

On reaching the resort, nothing tragic at first met the eye of these curiosity seekers. To allay the fears of the thousands who already crowded the park, Sousa's band, which is playing there this week, continued its concert, and while shouts of the firemen mingled with the moans of the dying, there came from the band stand the notes of opera and ragtime airs. Even when the black wagon arrived from the Morgue, flying its black flag, the gay tunes continued.

As the flames died down under the streams of water played upon them, the section of the park in which the tragedy occurred was the only part of the resort in darkness. Elsewhere the bright lights blazed forth, and either unaware of the toll taken by the flames or careless of it, some patrons continued to press their way into the various side shows which kept up their performances.

PEACE CONFERENCE DEFERS ITS VACATION

Waits For Signing of Treaties With Austria, Bulgaria and Hungary.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 9.—The Supreme Council decided this afternoon that the Peace Conference, which has been in continuous session for eight months, should not take a vacation until after the signing of the treaties with Austria, Bulgaria, and Hungary is completed. Then there may be a recess before taking up the Turkish treaty, leaving that work until something definite can be ascertained concerning America's attitude toward taking a mandate for Turkey.

America's decision on that point will have a vital bearing on the form the Turkish treaty takes. If no mandate goes to the United States, there is a likelihood that the thing that will happen to Turkey will closely resemble what in the old wicked days was called partition. In case the conference takes a vacation, it is possible that it will leave only one plenipotentiary in Paris with a staff of experts to work on the Turkish treaty.

The American Expeditionary Force has asked the Peace Conference what it shall do with its German prisoners. The American soldier's attitude on this point is that the war is over and the American forces want to be rid of guarding their 40,000 prisoners by shipping them back to Germany. But the American peace delegates are not so sure about this, holding that some consideration should be shown to the French in the matter until the war is formally ended by the three big powers' ratification of the treaty, when France will release her own prisoners.

'GAIETIES OF 1919' CLOSED BY STRIKE; OTHERS TO REOPEN

Managers in Statement Give Their Side of Controversy with Equity Association.

PROTEST BY BROADHURST

John Drew Brings Sympathy of Himself and the Barrymores to Strike Headquarters.

ACTOR PICKET FINED $25

Albee and Keith Booking Exchange Offers Vaudeville Help to Producing Managers.

One more playhouse will be darkened tonight, owing to the inroads made upon it by the striking actors, but two or three of the ten already closed will endeavor to reopen.

Sunday was spent by the rival camps in laying plans for the more strenuous weekdays ahead—the actors in recruiting members for their organization and the managers in preparing their shows to reopen. The Producing Managers' Association issued a statement in explanation of its position, and began also a campaign of newspaper advertising.

E. H. Sothern, who resigned from the Actors' Equity Association after his efforts to mediate between the actors and managers had failed, issued a statement last night, in which he explained why he was opposed to the stand taken by the striking actors.

The Shuberts' two biggest musical productions, they announced yesterday, will be practically suspended tonight. In the case of the "Gaieties of 1919," at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, the suspension will be complete. This attraction was weakened greatly by the defection of Ed Wynn, George Hassell, and several others, and has since been presenting a mixed program with indifferent results.

The residue of this entertainment will now be combined with the show at the Winter Garden, where all efforts to present "Monte Cristo, Jr." will be abandoned. The show at the Winter Garden will be frankly vaudeville, interspersed with ensemble numbers from the "Gaieties" and "Monte Cristo, Jr."

E. F. Albee and the Keith Booking Exchange have offered the managers all help in keeping their musical houses open.

It is possible that the question of a sympathy strike by the musicians and stage hands will be decided this morning at a conference to be held at the offices of the Actors' Equity Association. This conference will be participated in by Joe N. Weber, head of the Musicians' Union; Charles C. Shay, President of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes; Hugh Frayne, organizer for the American Federation of Labor; James P. Holland, President of the New York State Federation of Labor, and officials of the actors' organization.

The actors kept both their main offices and their Forty-fifth Street headquarters open all day yesterday and far into the night. Forty-fifth Street, which has become an open forum for the discussion of the actors' problems, was again practically closed to traffic.

Actor Picket Arrested.

Richard Gordon, an actor, living at the Lambs Club was arrested in front of the Winter Garden last night, charged with stopping prospective patrons and informing them that the entertainment within was a "bum show." He was taken to the West Forty-seventh Street Station, charged with disorderly conduct.

The Shuberts announced that the delay in transferring "The Greenwich Village Follies" to the Nora Bayes Theatre was not brought about by the strike. The show, it is declared, will open at the Nora Bayes on Monday night of next week.

John Drew, speaking at strike headquarters last night, told the members gathered there that his nephews, Lionel and Jack Barrymore, had requested that the strikers be notified through him that they were with the Actors' Equity Association. He also read a letter from Ethel Barrymore in which she allied herself with the organization.

Announcement was made by the managers that half a dozen well-known players had resigned from the Actors' Equity Association. These were Janet Beecher, Olive Wyndham, Zelda Sears, Valli Valli, Laura Hope Crews, and Jeanette Lowrie. Miss Sears, in announcing her resignation, gave out a letter setting forth some of the reasons. In this she said:

"Two months ago I resigned from the council of the association as a protest against the rapidly growing radicalism of that body. At that time Francis Wilson, Grant Stewart, and Frank Gilmore, individually and collectively, assured me that, whatever happened, the Equity would respect Equity contracts already in existence, which managers and and actors had signed in good faith. In fact, Mr. Wilson stated that to think of doing anything else was ridiculous, as the basic law of the association was respect for the sacredness of contractual relations. In the face of this they now ask us to break our Equity contracts by walking out of the theatres at a moment's notice."

Miss Sears has been rehearsing in the place of Florine Arnold, who went on

Ship With the Prince of Wales Is Nearing Newfoundland

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Aug. 10.—The Admiralty wireless station announced tonight that the British battleship Renown, on which the Prince of Wales is coming to this colony and Canada, was met by the cruiser Dauntless, 120 miles off St. John's, at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The cruiser Dragon was accompanying the Renown.

The flotilla was proceeding slowly tonight in good weather, with a full moon and no fog, and will enter Conception Bay early tomorrow. It is expected that the Renown will cruise around the bay tomorrow and come to this city on Tuesday.

SEIZE 66 RUSSIANS AS MURDER LEAGUE

Many Crimes Among Large Russian Colony of Stockholm.

WEALTHY EXILE STRANGLED

Bodies of Three Others Found in a Lake—Others Are Missing from Their Homes.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—Sixteen Russians, including five women, are in prison in Stockholm, and fifty more are being detained on suspicion of being members of a political murder league, believed to have been concerned in the killing of Nikolai Ardasjeff, a prominent member of the Russian colony in Stockholm, according to the correspondent in that city of the Weekly Dispatch.

The bodies of three other persons believed to have been victims of the league have been found in a lake near Stockholm, and several other prominent Russians from the large colony of exiles in Stockholm are missing.

The Stockholm police, the correspondent says, believe that those arrested belong to a Bolshevist organization, which is contrary to early reports, identifying them as members of an organization which had for its purpose the restoration of the Russian monarchy. The Stockholm hotels and villas are filled with Russian refugees, some of whom are mysterious characters, with plenty of money.

"Who are Bolsheviki and who are not Bolsheviki of the actors in this web of crimea cannot be unravelled from the various conflicting newspaper stories," the correspondent adds, "and speculations and accusations are rife in the Stockholm Russian community. It may be that the three victims found in the lake were murdered only for their money.

The correspondent's story of the murder of Ardasjeff says that the latter was lured to a villa outside of Stockholm where he was chained to a wall for twenty-six hours without food or water. The next day a court-martial of twenty assembled and after a brief trial Ardasjeff was found guilty of treason and sentenced to death. It was announced by a member of the court-martial, the correspondent continues, that if Ardasjeff would sign several blank checks his life would be spared. He signed the checks, but was then slowly strangled to death.

SEIZE REDS IN BRITISH CAMP

Training Place for Russian Officers Scene of Thirteen Arrests.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—Serious trouble, which has existed the past week in the Russian officers' training camp at Newmarket, culminated today in the arrest of thirteen Bolsheviki, including two women, says The Daily Herald, the labor organ.

The camp is being maintained to train Russian officers for Admiral Kolchak's forces in Russia, and secret agents, both British and Russian, are said to abound about the camp.

The Daily Herald says that it understands these agents have repeatedly unearthed Bolshevist plots hatched by some of the Russians, and hence the arrests. The newspaper adds that four or five Russians are missing from the camp and are being sought.

Coal Controller Says Concession Would Mean National British Strike.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The strike in the Yorkshire coal fields, involving 200,000 miners, apparently will be fought to a finish. The Coal Controller yesterday told the men's leaders it was impossible to concede their demands. To do so, he said, would mean a strike in every coal field in the country for similar concessions.

No further conferences with a view to arriving at a settlement have been arranged. It is said the strikers' funds will last only another fortnight. Already £250,000 has been spent in strike pay.

MARK FALLS STILL LOWER.

Swiss Pay Under 33 Francs for 100 Marks—Austrian Money Worse.

BERNE, Aug. 9, (Associated Press.)—German exchange fell again today 33 francs for 100 marks, 32 francs 75 centimes and 32 francs 80 centimes being offered.

Exchange was unfavorably influenced by the heavy outstanding German debts in Switzerland and the flight of German capital to Switzerland, which is estimated at over 30,000,000,000 marks.

Austrian exchanges, however was worse than the German, between 13 and 14 francs being offered for 100 crowns.

PALMER MOVES TO CHECK RETAILERS BY WIDE 'FAIR PRICES' CAMPAIGN; SHOPMEN TO TAKE ACTION THURSDAY

UNIONS CALL CONVENTION

Six Crafts Will Meet in Chicago to Pass on Wilson's Demand.

EASTERN WORKERS TO VOTE

New Haven and Boston Conferences Leave to Men Question of Returning to Work.

WASHINGTON IS OPTIMISTIC

Railroad Administration Expects Strike Situation to Approach Normal Today.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—A call for a convention of representatives of the striking railway shopmen of the country, to be held here Thursday to determine definitely what action shall be taken, was issued today by the Chicago District Council of the Federated Railway Shopmen, which called the strike Aug. 1 in defiance of the international officers of the shop crafts unions.

This action grew out of a conference yesterday of some of the international officers and representatives of the council and the strikers. At the meeting it is expected a definite decision regarding President Wilson's request that the men return to work pending settlement of their demands for increased wages by the Railroad Administration will be reached.

The strike has been declared illegal by the international officers. It was called by the Chicago District Council, whose officers declared the rank and file wished it because the international officers had failed to obtain a settlement of the demand for 85 cents an hour for mechanics and 60 cents for helpers, presented last February to the Railroad Administration. The council's Secretary sent a telegram to President Wilson yesterday refusing to order the men to return to work.

L. M. Hawver, President of the District Council, said his men dominated the conferences yesterday, and that a proposed plan of action with a committee of fourteen to direct it was defeated. He said it was agreed then that a convention of union representatives should take action.

J. D. Sanders, Secretary of the Chicago District Council, and Davis Cross White, Vice President of the International Carmen's Union, left today for Washington for the announced purpose of conferring with Director-General Hines. It was decided yesterday that the international officers would use their influence to obtain a hearing for Sanders, although President Wilson had said the strikers must return to work before consideration of their demands would be given.

Expect Normal Conditions Today.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Developments over the week-end are expected to result in almost normal conditions tomorrow in every railroad shop where men have been on strike.

Director General Hines is ready to undertake negotiation of wage demands, as directed by President Wilson, as soon as the men return to work. In view of President Wilson's specific instructions that the whole matter would have to be "at a standstill" so long as an illegal strike continued, the demand of men in some places for wage increases before going back to the job, it was learned, cannot alter the situation.

NEW HAVEN WORKERS PUT STRIKE TO A VOTE

Passenger Service Over Harlem River Stopped by Walkout of Inspectors.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 10.—The earliest possible time for the striking shopmen of the New York, New Haven & Hartford to return to work will be next Friday, according to information given out this afternoon, following a long meeting of the system federation of this city, thirty delegates from Boston, Providence, Vanness, N. Y., New York City, and this city attending.

It was voted to leave the question of returning to work directly with the men, a report to be made at a meeting to be held in New Haven on Thursday of this week. There are six crafts affected by the strike, the machinists, boiler makers, blacksmiths, carmen, sheet metal workers, and electrical workers, and it will require a favorable vote of four of these groups to declare the strike formally off.

Sentiment among the striking shopmen here seems to be in favor of returning

Text of Palmer's Telegram to Food Administrators Requesting Them to Form Fair Price Committees

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—In his dispatch to the State Food Administrators today in connection with the "fair prices" campaign Attorney General Palmer said:

In order to secure accurate information relative to charges of profiteering by dealers in the necessary commodities, it is the desire of the Government to ascertain whether such dealers are making more than a fair margin of profit. Will you assist in your States by requesting those persons who have been county food administrators under your jurisdiction to appoint fair price committeess, including one retailer of groceries, one of drygoods, a representative of the producers, of organized labor, of housewives, two or three representatives of the public generally, and also a wholesale dealer when practicable.

Please request them to pursue approximately the same inquiries with reference to food products and ordinary necessities of drygoods and clothing that were pursued by your fair price committees under the Food Administration act. This committee will be an extra-legal body without power to summon witnesses or fix prices. It is requested, however, to ascertain the cost prices to determine the fair margin of profit, and if retail prices are in excess of what the committee regards a fair price, to have published its list of fair prices, reporting to you for review. You are requested to report to the Department of Justice a general review of the situation in your State.

Any evidence of hoarding or other violations of the Food Control act which may be developed in the work of such committees should be turned over to the United States Attorney, who will be instructed to employ all his resources as well as those of the Bureau of Investigation to co-operate with you and your committees in seeking out and punishing all violators of the law. There is a pressing necessity for the restoration of normal conditions and it is believed that through the same organization you had as Federal Food Administrator you and your county administrators, together with their appointees, can render a valuable service to the country, and your co-operation and theirs without compensation will be greatly appreciated.

The widest publicity of this movement and the results obtained by the county committees, it is believed, will be an important factor in its success. Please wire whether the Government can count upon your co-operation.

ADVISERS FROWN ON PLUMB PLAN

Delegates Summoned by League Fail to Indorse It at Conference.

CALL OCTOBER CONVENTION

Say Private Rights Must Be Protected—Counsel Avoidance of Passion and Prejudice.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Plans to force legislation for the nationalization of the railways through Congress by open threats against Senators, Representatives, and other Government official who refused to obey their will were dropped, temporarily at least, tonight by the more radical advocates of the Plumb plan after they had received a report from the delegates, other than labor leaders, who began conferences here on Saturday.

These delegates, in a statement prepared by Chief Justice Walter Clark of the Supreme Court of North Carolina and made public through the Plumb Plan League, recommended a careful review of all proposed legislation "in the orderly manner which befits a question of such transcendental importance to the American people," and announced that a national conference had been called to meet in Washington on Oct. 6 to take up the whole problem.

Justice Clark, speaking for those who met with him today, (there was none of the representatives of the four railroad brotherhoods or other organizations of railway employes present,) did not give sanction to the Plumb plan, but urged reforms in railroad legislation that would dispose of the charges that the railroads were being exploited at the expense of the public and insure operation of the systems on a basis which would serve to reduce living costs.

Glenn E. Plumb, author of the Plumb plan, said tonight that the developments would not result in any change in the plans of the league to make the principles involved in their proposals an issue in the Presidential campaign, should Congress refuse legislation acceptable to the railway workers before that time. In fact, some felt that consideration of the railroad problem at the convention to be held in October would serve to make the issue of even greater importance in the next political contest if the convention approved a majority or all of the principles which the Plumb plan includes.

The railway workers, as represented by the four brotherhoods, assert that there is no way to keep the issue out of the Presidential campaign except by adoption of their ideas, but it is apparent that the defiant attitude which marked the launching of the plan has been materially modified. It is said in this connection that word has been given that the "hand was overplayed," and that, in the face of the President's address of Friday and the evident de-

'WORK, SAVE,' SAYS RESERVE BOARD

Remedy for Economic and Financial Situation Says Governor of Board.

PRICES INFLATE CURRENCY

Writes Senator McLean That Deflation Legislation Is Unnecessary and Undesirable.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Working and saving, increase in production, and the exercise of economy by eliminating luxuries so that money, goods, and services can be devoted primarily to the liquidation of debts created by the war are the Federal Reserve Board's suggestions for decreasing the cost of living. The board deems currency legislation unnecessary and undesirable.

This opinion is expressed in a letter made public tonight, written by W. H. G. Harding, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, to Senator George P. McLean, Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Finance, who asked Mr. Harding for the board's views on the advisability of legislation providing for gradual deflation of the currency as proposed in a pending Senate resolution.

The situation relative to the volume of money in circulation, expansion of credits and notes issues during the war, and collateral matters are set forth in the letter. In the opinion of the board, no legislation is necessary at this time respecting United States notes, and provision has already been made for the gradual retirement of national bank notes, secured by United States 2 per cent. bonds, while the issue of Federal Reserve bank notes has brought about no increase in the circulating medium.

After asserting that currency legislation is unnecessary and undesirable at this time, Mr. Harding says:

"Whether viewed from an economic or financial standpoint, the remedy for the present situation is the same, namely, to work and to save; work regularly and efficiently, in order to produce and distribute the largest possible volume of commodities, and to exercise economies in order that money, goods, and services may be devoted primarily to the liquidation of debt and to the satisfaction of the demand for necessities, rather than to indulgence in extravagance or the gratification of a desire for luxuries."

The Board believes those who see in the large volume of circulation the prime cause of the increased cost of living and who seek a remedy by a forced contraction of the currency must have in mind Federal Reserve notes and, after discussing their status asserts that "the increased volume of Federal Reserve notes in circulation during the past three years, in so far as it is not the result of direct exchanges for gold and gold certificates which have been withdrawn from circulation, is the effect of advancing wages and prices, and not their cause".

Mr. Harding's letter is as follows:

"Dear Sir—The Federal Reserve Board acknowledges receipt of your letter of

ATTORNEY GENERAL ACTS

Asks Ex-Food Administrators to Name 'Fair Price' Committees.

TO PROSECUTE PROFITEERS

Wants Evidence of Excessive Profits and Hoarding to Institute Action.

TO KEEP PUBLIC INFORMED

Bills to License Storage Warehouses Go to Both Houses of Congress Today.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Definite action was taken today by Attorney General Palmer to have the fair prices to the consumers determined and to ascertain what part of the high cost of living was due to excessive profits by the retailers.

The Attorney General, in a telegram today to the State Food Administrators who served under Herbert Hoover, asked that fair price committees be formed throughout the country to get the facts as to local prices and conditions, and requested Hoover's former aids to join him in a nation-wide publicity campaign to place the facts before the public.

Meanwhile, Congress has decided to act on the legislative recommendations made by President Wilson, and bills to regulate cold storage warehouses will be proposed in the Senate and the House early this week. One bill, to be introduced by Representative Hutchinson, Republican, of New Jersey, will be taken up by the House Agricultural Committee, and another, almost identical, will be introduced in the Senate by Senator Frelinghuysen, Republican, of New Jersey.

Mr. Palmer's action is in compliance with the President's statement to Congress that a publicity campaign would be part of the Administration's program to reduce the high cost of living, and is probably the "extra legal" means of striking at the profiteers which Mr. Palmer recently suggested was under consideration. Mr. Palmer has indicated that he cannot prosecute directly for exorbitant prices, and apparently counts on public sentiment to discipline the profiteer once he is known.

Mr. Palmer asks the State Food Administrators to inform him of any evidence of violations of the wartime food law, and in return promises to enforce vigorously the law where hoarding and profiteering are unearthed, and to use the department's machinery to make the campaign a success. It is not the intention, however, to revive the Food Administration in all its activities, but merely to take such steps under the food control law which are likely to be most effective.

The two bills which will be introduced in Congress follow generally the outline of storage warehouse legislation enacted by the New Jersey Legislature, to which President Wilson referred in his address to Congress. Representative Haugen of Iowa, Chairman of the Agricultural Committee, has invited representatives of the Department of Agriculture and other agencies interested to appear at the committee hearings on the Hutchinson measure.

Would License Warehouses.

The Hutchinson bill provides that operators of cold storage warehouses must obtain licenses to operate them. The licenses would be issued by the Department of Agriculture at a fee of $50 a year. Under the measure, all commodities received at warehouses must be stamped on the day of receipt. Commodities from other countries cannot be received unless they show the date of receipt in this country, except when the Department of Agriculture gives special consent.

The bill stipulates that no food products may be kept in storage more than ten months, except upon permission of the Secretary of Agriculture. Food stored for longer periods may be sold at public auction, if fit for use, or else condemned.

The measure provides that it shall not be construed to "prohibit the shipping of fresh food in properly refrigerated cars, or to hold them in a cooling room for forty-eight hours, or prohibit the keeping of fresh food in iceboxes in retail stores." Provision is made for an elaborate system of inspection of warehouses by the Department of Agriculture. Quarterly reports must be made to the department by managers of cold storage plants.

An effort will be made by members of the House Agriculture Committee to tack a provision to the bill providing that producers' prices be marked on commodities in storage, as recommended by the President. Considerable opposition, however, exists both in the House and Senate to that proposal.

"I do not believe any such provision would be workable," said Mr. Hutchinson tonight. "The President recommended price marking in two different connections in his address. First, in speaking of cold storage foods, and again in connection with other commodities. So far as the cold storage end of it is concerned, it would hardly be feasible.

Opposes Price Marking.

"The purpose of cold storage regulation is to encourage storage under proper conditions. For example, it is proper that eggs should be put in storage when they are plentiful, otherwise prices would go higher than they do. Market prices will vary, and a marked price would be all out of proportion to the price at which the commodity would be put on the market. The market price might be either higher or lower.

"My bill would effect several changes in the storage warehouse system. For one thing, under present conditions, it is possible to keep commodities in storage in one State for a time and then transfer them to another State. Under this bill it would be impossible to do that. The effect of this obviously would be to prevent indefinite storage of products."

These penalties are provided for violation of the provisions in the proposed act:

"That any person or persons, corporation or corporations, or officer, or officers thereof violating any of the provisions of the act shall, upon conviction, be subject to a penalty of not exceeding $500 for the first offense. Any such person, &c., having been once convicted, and, upon a second offense, be held guilty of a misdemeanor. The conviction of any corporation shall not operate to relieve any officer or officers, agents or employes of such corporation from prosecution under the provisions of this act."

Treman to Act in New York State.

ITHACA, N. Y., Aug. 10.—"Fair price" committees to investigate the sale of food in the State, outside New York City, and report to the Department of Justice any evidence of profiteering, are to be formed at the request of Attorney General Palmer. In a telegram to Charles E. Treman of Ithaca, former State Federal Food Administrator, outside the metropolitan district, Mr. Palmer today urged the formation of such committees. Mr. Treman, complying with the request sent telegrams to fifty-four former county food administrators asking that they take steps at once to have the committees appointed.

LOWER PRICES PREDICTED.

Arthur Williams Sees Hopes in Moral Effect on Dealers.

Arthur Williams, who during the war was Federal Food Administrator for the New York district, in commenting last night upon the effect of the Attorney General's move in the war upon the high cost of living, maintained that the moral effect upon dealers would be similar to that which operated during the war, and that prices will begin to come down as soon as the fair price lists began to appear, or even sooner. As soon as he has communicated with Mr. Palmer as to further details of the proposed measure he will proceed to carry out the directions immediately.

Since the signing of the armistice the work of the Food Administration in this city has been practically at a standstill. The winding up of its affairs has been directed from Mr. Williams's office in the building of the Edison Company at 130 East Fifteenth Street, but with the resumption of activities it is probable that new quarters will be taken.

"I am sure," said Mr. Williams, "that the people of New York will do all they can to co-operate with the Food Administration to make this work effective. My opinion is that as soon as the dealer finds that there is a suggestion of profiteering his fear that he will be brought back to the attitude that he took for the most part when the war was on. I am sure that I will get the hearty support of dealers when they realize that they are being called upon to serve the country patriotically just as surely as when the boys were in the trenches. The percentage persisting in keeping up exorbitant prices will be very small, but they will be punished with severity I am sure.

"The President's address to Congress has made the country realize that there is a real necessity for co-operation and patriotic response, and the great majority of merchants are patriotic. The address has given them a new vision of responsibility. Many of them probably thought that when the war was over they could go back to the old ways and get as much as they could out of their products, but both the President and the Attorney General have brought it forcibly to their attention that the danger to the country is just as great as it was before and calls for the same kind of service. During the war there were about 2,500 cases of profiteering dealt with out of a total of 25,000. That makes about 10 per cent., and I hope it will be smaller now.

"When the fair price lists were published the prices for the most part came down, and I expect them to have the same effect now."

Deputy Commissioners of Public Markets O'Malley and Smith were in Washington yesterday conferring with representatives of the War Department as to prices, quality and quantity of surplus army foods which the city intends to buy for the people of New York. They felt, after conference with Captain A. A. Stewart of the Zone Supply Bureau, this city, that the Government prices were hardly any lower than could be offered by any of the large chain stores, and with the idea of getting better quotations they went to Washington. They will probably report back to Commissioner Hall this morning.

With the purpose of bringing these supplies within the reach of poor people without sufficient capital to purchase any quantity, the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor announced yesterday that it would make considerable advances to these unfortunates, in order that they might not be deprived of the opportunity of taking advantage of the lower prices. This was highly necessary, the association pointed out in its statement, as the cost of food in this city was 81 per cent. higher than it was before the war.

CHICAGO AFTER PROFITEERS.

Evidence Against Retailers Will Go to the Grand Jury.

Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—A drive at profiteering grocers and butchers will be started by the Federal District Attorney's office tomorrow, according to Colonel H. R. Harris, Jr., who will have charge of the Grand Jury.

Gathering of evidence on prices will probably take up most of the coming week, it was stated. The facts will be placed before the Grand Jury simultaneously with complaints against the packers and wholesalers.

Colonel Harris explained that the prosecuting office would rely upon housewives for most of the information against grocery and meat dealers who overcharge.

SHOES TOO HIGH FOR RICH.

Chicago Millionaires Are Wearing Tapped and Patched Footgear.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10. — Workingmen with their greatly increased wages must be the customers of the shoe shops which are displaying $14, $16 and $18 shoes in their windows, for the millionaires, according to their confession, are wearing the old ones, patched and repatched.

Roger Sullivan, of gas and political fame, said Saturday that neither he nor E. K. G. Billings, whose guest he is in California, had bought a pair of shoes in two years, and today half a dozen other Chicagoans of wealth made the same declaration.

J. Ogden Armour said he had purchased his first pair of shoes in three or four years last week.

"The repair man has kept my footwear in good shape," he said. "I never like to buy when prices are high."

Britton I. Budd, President of the Chicago Elevated lines, has been having his old shoes made over ever since this country entered the war.

"It was to conserve leather at first, then because prices are so high," he said today in explanation.

Sears Roebuck & Co., owns a shoe factory, but Julius Rosenwald, its President, has not taken a pair out of stock for more than two years. They cost too much.

"I will wait until they come down in price before buying more shoes," he said today over the phone from his home in Highland Park. "Meantime I am having new soles put on my old shoes as fast as they wear out."

MANAGERS' SIDE OF ACTORS' STRIKE

A Statement of the Position of the Producers in the Controversy.

SUBMIT BOTH CONTRACTS

Arbitration Clauses Pointed to as Evidence of Producers' Fair Intentions.

In a detailed statement issued last night, following a meeting held late in the afternoon, the Producing Managers' Association outlined the successive steps which have led to the present strike of the actors, and explained the stand they have taken in the matter. Here is their statement:

"The Producing Managers' Association of America invited the Council of the Actors' Equity Association to a meeting at the Hotel Claridge, May 2, to enter into a continuation of the relations that had existed between the managers and the Actors' Equity Association for several years. At this meeting the Producing Managers' Association informed the Actors' Equity Association that it was desirous of entering into an agreement with the Actors' Equity Association for a period of three or five years; that it favored a permanent arbitration board, composed equally of actors and managers, this board to submit to the decision of an outside umpire in case of deadlock.

During the meeting, Francis Wilson, President of the Actors' Equity Association, was asked if his association was taking steps toward the 'closed shop.' Mr. Wilson admitted that some such action had been taken. Thereupon Henry Miller, a member of both the actors' and managers' associations, announced that he would have no dealings with the Actors' Equity Association if it attempted any such restriction of the theatre.

All Managers Support Miller.

"Every manager present rose to Mr. Miller's support and pledged himself in unfaltering opposition to such a move, or to any move that had the slightest tendency in this direction.

"The situation was made absolutely clear. The managers were ready and willing to deal on any fair basis of contract with the Actors' Equity Association, but they would not consent to any attempt to interfere in the engaging of actors who did not happen to belong to the association.

"The result of this meeting was the appointing of an Actors' Committee and a Managers' Committee on Contract.

"Several days later these committees met and practically all the points of the new contract were agreed upon. It was decided that each committee should draft tentative contracts, these to be merged at a second meeting. The second meeting was never held. Frank Gilmore, Secretary of the Actors' Equity Association, delivered to Henry W. Savage, Chairman of the Managers Committee, a form of contract, which he said was final in all but one point: the Actors' Equity Association would accept. Mr. Savage asked Mr. Gilmore if he meant that the managers' refusal to agree to this contract would mean an attempt on the part of the Actors' Equity Association to enforce the 'closed shop,' and Mr. Gilmore's reply was that the managers failure to agree would force the Actors' Equity Association to extreme measures and the 'closed shop' might be among them. Then the situation, instituted by the managers to reach an amicable arrangement between actor and manager, with the manager willing and anxious to deal with a collective body of actors, resulted in an ultimatum from the Actors' Equity Association, accompanied by a threat of extreme measures, which they faithfully lived up to in the past few days.

"With cessation of negotiations the managers drafted a contract following the contract which the Actors' Equity Association had drafted and operated under for three years.

Arbitration Clause.

"The arbitration clause in the Actors' Equity Association contract is as follows:

"The parties hereto, in consideration of said employment and hiring and of the mutual promises herein contained, agree for their mutual benefit and protection that in the event of any dispute or disagreement in respect to a claim for salary or damages for alleged wrongful discharge before a right of action shall accrue, it shall be submitted to arbitration to ascertain and determine what sum, if any, is due for salary or damages. The arbiters shall be two disinterested persons, to be chosen from among persons engaged in the theatrical profession, one by each of the parties hereto, and the two so chosen shall first elect a competent disinterested umpire. The two arbiters together shall then estimate and fix the amount of salary or damages, if any, and, failing to agree, shall submit the matter to the umpire. The award in writing of any two shall determine the amount of such salary or damages.

"The parties hereto shall pay the arbiters respectively selected by them, and they shall bear equally the expenses of the arbitration and the umpire.

"The arbiters and umpire shall be appointed within ten days after notice, and shall within one week after their appointment meet to hear and determine the differences which have arisen, it being provided, however, that if the actor be a member in good standing of the Actors' Equity Association and the manager a member in good standing of the United Managers' Protective Association, then in that event it is agreed by the parties hereto that the respective arbiters shall be selected by these respective organizations.

"Should suit be brought before the selection of arbiters, the party sued may, at any time after suit and before trial, give notice of his desire for an arbitration and choose an arbiter as herein provided.

"The arbitration clause in the Producing Managers' Association contracts is as follows:

"'The parties hereto in consideration of said employment and hiring, and of the mutual promises herein contained, agree for their mutual benefit and protection that in the event of any dispute or disagreement (1) as to any matter or thing covered by this contract; (2) as to the meaning of the contract or its application to any state of facts which may arise, then said dispute or claim shall be arbitrated. The managers shall choose one arbitrator and the actor the second.

"'The arbiters shall be two disinterested persons to be chosen from among persons engaged in the theatrical profession—one by each of the parties hereto, and the two so chosen shall first elect a competent disinterested umpire. The two arbiters together shall then estimate and fix the amount of salary or damages, if any, and, failing to agree, shall submit the matter to the umpire. The award in writing of any two shall determine the amount of such salary or damages.

"'The parties hereto shall pay the arbiters respectively selected by them and they shall bear equally the expenses of the arbitration and the umpire.

Provision Covering Suits.

"Should suit be brought before the selection of arbiters, the party sued may, at any time after suit and before trial, give notice of his desire for an arbitration and choose an arbiter as herein provided.'

"It will be noted that there is nothing in the managers' contract to prevent an actor from selecting the Actors' Equity Association or a member thereof as his arbitrator. Moreover, there is nothing in the clause to prevent the several arbitrators from selecting the Actors' Equity Association or a member thereof as the final arbitrator.

"It is important that the fact should be known that actors who 'walked out' had signed Actors' Equity Association contracts with their managers, had not notified their managers of an intention to strike, and have shown by their action that the signing by them of the Actors' Equity Association contract is not a guarantee of an intention to live up to the terms of agreement. On the other hand, had the managers failed to fulfill these contracts, as the actors have done, they would have been liable for every dollar of salary involved in the terms of the contract.

"The chief point of difference between the actors and managers was the eight-performance clause. The managers had brought much evidence to show that this was a demand they could not comply with in many cases. As further evidence of his good faith Mr. Wilson publicly offered to submit this clause to the arbitration of former President Taft and Charles E. Hughes, knowing full well that the managers could not honestly enter into such arbitration, since they could not afford to abide by an adverse decision, and about all that any striking actor can offer today as a grievance is, 'the managers wouldn't arbitrate.'

"To further make forever impossible any relationship between the managers and the Actors' Equity Association, Mr. Wilson took into his councils two notorious agitators and trouble makers, who before their downfall had created great havoc in the vaudeville profession. The mark of these men instantly appeared in public villification of managers and haranguing of actors, scurrilous attacks in their only published mouthpiece, and as a grand climax the strike, complete repudiation of Actors' Equity contracts, by which the managers were unlawfully holding, vulgar street displays, $500 a week actors accosting $30 a week chorus girls at stage doors and asking them to get out in sympathy; threats of assault on managers, parading of theatres, mailing of all anonymous letters, and the completest demonstration of all the misery an unscrupulous agitator can create, particularly when he has as his plaything an unusually emotional class.

"So far as the managers are concerned, the Actors' Equity Association has proved itself the enemy of the actor and the manager. No contract with any of its members can ever be considered anything better than an obligation that can be cancelled by the Actors' Equity Association at thirty minutes' notice, for the actor is no longer free. There is a power above him that tells him when and where he may not work. He has no right to make an individual contract, since he cannot be sure that he can fulfill it.

"It has ceased to be a struggle between the actor and the manager. The manager must fight now to deliver the actor from the grip of unscrupulous agitators and restore him to a position of some personal liberty.

"The Producing Managers' Association will continue to keep the theatres open, and will give performances. They will have no quarrel nor have they had any quarrel with organized labor, a fact which is clearly proven by the continued good relations that exist between the managers and the union of stage hands, musicians, &c. The Producing Managers' Association deplores a strike in this industry at the present time, when there is so much unrest throughout the country."

SOTHERN FEARS FOR FUTURE OF STAGE

Veteran Actor Says Managers Did Desire to Confer with Striking Players.

Discussing the situation growing out of the actors' striko, E. H. Sothern said last night:

"I was a member of the Actors' Equity Association, but I did not approve of their tactics, so I resigned. I am not a member of the Managers' Producing Association, and therefore am an independent in this controversy. I have practically retired from the stage, as I intend to give only a few performances next year. Therefore I am in this affair merely as one who loves his calling and does not wish to see anything harmful happen to it.

"I deplore the strike terribly, for it is much more tragic than the public has any idea of. They think it is amusing to see actors perform antics in front of the theatres, so they do not take seriously what is happening. But what is happening is that the fourth largest commercial institution in the country is being ruined. The tragedy is that all this could have been prevented.

"A meeting was called for 3:30 o'clock on the afternoon of Aug. 7. I heard that a strike was being discussed, so I went to see Mr. Shubert, and in his office met Mr. Brady.

"I asked what I could do to prevent the strike being called. They empowered me to say to the Actors' Equity Association in mass meeting that if all the members of the association or as many as could come, accompanied by any other actors not members of the association, would meet them in the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, the managers would stand in a body on the stage, all thirty of them, and listen to any actors hereto, and the two so chosen shall first elect a competent disinterested umpire. The two arbiters together shall then estimate and fix the amount of salary or damages, if any, and failing to agree, shall submit the matter to the umpire. The award in writing of any two shall determine the amount of such salary or damages.

"'The parties hereto shall pay the arbiters respectively selected by them and they shall bear equally the expenses of the arbitration and the umpire.

"I said to them that it was a great misfortune that representatives of the managers and of the actors had not been able to come to an amicable settlement, as my own experience had been that a face to face meeting resulted in the evaporation of many difficulties. I saw that this was an opportunity for the opposing factions to have it out, for the accusers to hear from the defense.

"The managers told me they did not want to fight. They were most emphatic in this. They said they did not want a strike, as their money was invested in their business. At this time, it must be remembered, no strike had been called. There was only a rumor of it, and no official notice had been sent.

"I went to the actors' meeting, but it was only after a controversy with Mr. Wilson that I was allowed to speak. All I wanted to do was to deliver the specific message I had brought. I contended that no labor men on the platform, Mr. Frayne and Mr. Ruben, and it was astonishing to me to find that the labor men were opposed to a strike. Mr. Frayne pointed out that in these days of Bolshevism, it was a serious matter.

"Smith said, 'If we had only known of this offer this morning, we would have been able to stop the strike.' I replied, 'I can stop it now if you will get Wilson to let me talk.' So they took Wilson off the platform with Bruce McRae, and pleaded with them to let me speak my message. Wilson said it would break up the meeting. I put my hand on his shoulder and said, 'My dear old man, if your cause is just, you can let me talk, and I can not break up the meeting, but if it is not, and they listen to me and stop the strike, you yourself will some day want to thank me.'

"Finally, he agreed. I made my proposition, pleaded with the actors. I begged them to consider the consequences of a strike. I said, 'I don't know what all your grievances are, but if you meet the managers as I have suggested, each of you can pick out your individual manager and call him to book in public.'

"After this Wilson told me I was insulting him and the council. I said I had no desire to say anything unkind or insulting to anybody. I was simply reporting an invitation of the managers to meet them in the hope of stopping what I looked a catastrophe. Wilson put the motion to the assembly. They hissed me and voted it down.

"Here is the result: The Actors' Equity Association, in conjunction with labor, at any moment can cause a restriction of this affair. What sane business man can invest his money in the theatre at all? How can he pay authors for plays, buy scenery and properties, build theatres, and engage large companies of actors when he knows that at any moment, for some grievance, they are capable of doing what they are doing now?

"With this in mind, I went back to the managers and said: 'If you can not deal with Equity Association any more, something must be done. Nobody can suspect me of being your tool. I have no axe to grind. I am a man of 60 and have virtually left the profession. Many of my friends who are distinguished actors will be ruined by this sort of thing. Suppose I can get a committee of fifty of them to come to you to find what is the best kind of contract you will make with all the actors of America, whether they are members of the Equity Association or not. Will you discuss the matter with us as independents, and let us publish that contract?' They said they would, and asked me to tell my tale to the newspapers.

"That is why I am here. We want to make it clear to the laughing public that this is no laughing matter."

CHICAGO LOCKOUT ENDS.

State Attorney Says Contractors Will Take Back 100,000 Workers.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—The lockout of Building Trades and Building Material Workers in co-operation with the Chicago contractors whose lockout, following a strike of carpenters made idle more than 100,000 workers, has ended, State Attorney Welch of Lake County announced today. He had threatened prosecution of the contractors and building material men in his county.

A blow at Chicago contractors in other cities was announced today by building trades unionists. They declare that union men will be called off all jobs of Chicago contractors throughout the country. Detroit, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Milwaukee, and other cities will be affected, according to union leaders.

Simon O'Donnell, head of the Building Trades Council, intends to go to Washington Tuesday to ask intervention by the Department of Labor.

Charge Conspiracy in Means Case.

Special to The New York Times.

CABARRUS, N. C., Aug. 10.—Superior Court convenes tomorrow with Judge Adams presiding, and the Grand Jury will have presented to it testimony charging John T. Dooling, Assistant District Attorney of New York City and W. S. Miller, attorney for the Northern Trust Company of Chicago, with conspiracy and subornation of perjury in connection with the trial of Gaston B. Means in the fall of 1917, when Means was prosecuted for the alleged murder of Mrs. Maude A. King. Data will be presented to the Grand Jury, in addition to witnesses, and indictment will be asked for.

to work at once, and such a vote may be taken tomorrow.

There will be a meeting of the system federations of the New Haven road, the Boston & Maine, and the Boston & Albany in Boston tomorrow, it is understood, when there will be a further discussion of the strike situation on these three roads.

The statement was made at the general offices of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, in the Grand Central Terminal, last night, that in the event the strike of the shopmen in the employ of the company, is called off and the men return promptly to work normal service throughout the system will be restored in twenty-four hours. News from New Haven and Boston indicated, however, that even if the strike is terminated the men will probably not return to their jobs before the end of the week, which would mean that the present disorganized service will continue for some days yet. The seriousness of the situation was shown yesterday when it was officially announced that of the 10,321 shopworkers in the employ of the New Haven system, 6,827 are on strike, these being in addition to the car inspectors at the Harlem River yards, who walked out 00 and have virtually left the profession. Many of my friends who are distinguished actors will be ruined by this sort of thing. Suppose I can get a committee of fifty of them to come to you to find what is the best kind of contract you will make with all the actors of America, whether they are members of the Equity Association or not. Will you discuss the matter with us as independents, and let us publish that contract?' They said they would, and asked me to tell my tale to the newspapers.

termination of Congress to stand firm against threats, the "orderly" methods advocated by Justice Clark would in the end prove more effective.

The probabilities are that the effort to arrange a conference with President Wilson at an early date to obtain information as to his attitude toward the nationalization plans will be pushed and that, if the President refuses a conference at once, that agitation to draw out his views will be carried on continuously.

The plans of the Plumb Plan League to organize the nation and arouse sentiment for its proposal also will be continued.

But it is probable that the soft pedal will be put for a time on sensational utterances by propagandists of the Plumb Plan League, who are said to have been largely responsible for the fact that the Brotherhood leaders took the position they did—a position which, in some quarters it is now felt, has reacted sharply against them not only in Washington but throughout the country.

Among these men are a former member of the staff of The New York Nation, a former member of the Creel Committee on Public Information, and two or three newspaper men who have been described as proponents of "advanced thought." One of them is the chief publicity adviser of Mr. Plumb.

Statement of the Delegates.

However that may be, the statement which was issued tonight was not signed by the officials of the Plumb Plan League, but it is said was both written and finally approved by Justice Clark himself. It states, however, that it comes from the Plumb Plan Press Bureau. Here is the statement:

"As a result of our deliberations upon the existing railroad situation in the United States and the various suggestions which have been made for dealing therewith, the conference declares that the following principles should control the action of the government with respect to this most important question:

"The Government has resting upon it the duty and obligation to conserve and further the interest of the people as a body, particularly with respect to the conditions of their livelihood. Distribution of the products of the nation's industry and agriculture, is, therefore, not only a proper, but an imperative function of the Government, which the people have a right to insist shall be properly fulfilled. It is, therefore, incumbent upon the Government to provide transportation (as the principal factor in distribution) at actual cost, thus insuring means whereby the products of one region may, with only the addition of actual cost of transportation, be brought to the consumers in another territory.

"Efficiency and economy in transportation are obviously the keystone to the solution of the problem of the high cost of living. Any plan proposed for the solution of the railroad problem must, therefore, meet the test that it will provide transportation at actual cost. The existing state of industrial warfare is more costly to the consuming public than to the workers or to the owners of capital. Any plan for the solution of the railroad problem which seeks the indorsement of the public should provide for a share by the workers in the management and in the profits arising from increased efficiency. We therefore welcome any well-considered movement toward democratization of the railroads as being in the interest not only of the workers, but even more in the interest of the public.

"The rights of private property actually invested in the provision of transportation service for the public must be protected. At the same time it is imperative in the interest of economy and efficiency and as a means of decreasing the inflated cost of living that the return to the owners of capital invested in the transportation industry shall not exceed the amount actually necessary to secure their investment and shall not be paid upon fictitious capitalization. Treatment of the railroads as instruments for financial exploitation must cease. Public service, not private profit, should be the animating motive of the Railroad Administration.

"Transportation controls the economic and industrial life of the nation. It is of the utmost importance to industry and agriculture that the railroads shall be efficiently and economically constructed, maintained, and operated. Not only the cost of living, but the industrial position of America, depends upon the railroads being conducted with these fundamental principles in view.

"Several plans have been presented to the Congress of the United States for the future ownership and operation of the railroads. Some of these plans have been presented by the representatives of railroad security owners, and other property-owning groups. One plan has been presented by the representatives of the railroad employes. These plans must be tested and analyzed in the light of the principles already enunciated.

"In order that this may be done in the orderly manner which befits a question of such transcendent importance to the American people, we have determined to call a national conference to meet in Washington on Monday, Oct. 6, 1919, and we have further decided to appoint special committees to analyze the several proposals which have been offered for the solution of the railroad problem and to report their findings at that national conference.

"One of these committees will be composed of engineering and technical experts to report upon the proposals as regards their meeting the test of economy and efficiency; the second committee will be composed of legal authorities, to report upon the various legal and constitutional questions involved, and the third committee will be composed of economic and financial experts, who will report upon the soundness of the various plans from a financial standpoint.

"We urge the American people to consider all the proposals which have been made for dealing with the railroad situation without prejudice and without passion and to examine the several proposals which have been outlined in the light of the principles which we have enunciated."

FEW TRAINS LEAVE BOSTON.

Shopmen on Maine Line to Take Referendum on Strike.

BOSTON, Aug. 10.—Boston's two railroad terminals were almost deserted today as a result of the continuance of the shopmen's strike. Sunday schedules on the Boston & Maine and the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroads, ordinarily very light, were reduced to a minimum and virtually no trains except a few connecting with distant points were operated.

Men employed in the power house supplying electric light current for the North Station returned to work today. The strike of shopmen and other mechanics on the Boston & Maine system extended to the Connecticut and Passumpsic Division. Reports reaching railroad headquarters here said that upward of 600 men at Springfield, Lyndonville, Vt., and other points had quit work during the night.

Service on the Providence, Warwick and Bristol electric branch of the New Haven system was suspended today when twenty-three powerhouse employes quit work. Officials said efforts would be made to arrange for the operation of steam trains over the division.

At an all-day meeting of the Boston and Maine System Federation it was unanimously voted to refer directly to the men on strike the question of returning to work pending the outcome of the regular nation-wide referendum strike vote. William K. Cleary, representing the Grand Lodge officers of the Railway employes' Department of the American Federation of Labor, urged the men to go back to work. Meetings of the strikers will be held at all points on the system tomorrow.

The Boston and Albany Railroad announced tonight an embargo against all freight from connecting lines. Freight will not be accepted by the road at Boston except shipments of food for human consumption when destined to points on the road. The announcement added that the Boston and Albany would endeavor to continue passenger service "to the greatest extent possible," but that all dining-car service will be withdrawn.

B. & M. SIGNALMEN QUIT.

Car Inspectors in Springfield Yards Also Strike.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10.—A new phase of the railroad labor situation developed today, when a dozen signal maintainers employed on the Connecticut River Division of the Boston and Maine went on strike.

Car inspectors of the Boston and Maine employed in the Springfield yards also went out, and as a consequence passenger train service on the division will be curtailed beginning tomorrow.

ATLANTA UNIONS DEFIANT.

Decide to Continue Strike Until Their Demands Are Granted.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 10.—After an all day session, during which appeals were made to them by Grand Lodge officers to order all strikers to return to work, members of the Atlanta District Council, Federated Railway Shopmen, tonight announced they had reached a decision to continue the strike here until the original demands were met.

The Executive Committee also adopted a resolution calling a convention here at once, to which all locals in the Southeast were requested to send representatives.

ASKS WILSON TO INTERVENE

Union Wants Cambria Steel to Recognize Collective Bargaining.

JOHNSTOWN, Penn., Aug. 10.—President John Brophy, District No. 2 of the United Mine Workers of America, after addressing a large meeting of local miners, sent President Wilson a telegram asking the Chief Executive to induce the Cambria Steel Company, a subsidiary of Midvale Steel and Ordnance Company, "To confer with representatives of organized labor for the purpose of establishing bona fide collective bargaining, thereby assuring industrial peace."

President Brophy alleges thousands of workers were discharged following the organizing of labor unions here, and says industrial disturbances will inevitably follow if the steel company continues to refuse to meet representatives of the organized workers. The Midvale Company has a collective bargaining organization sanctioned by the company last October.

TAFT HITS PLUMB PLAN.

Do Not Let Soviet System Get a Foothold, He Says.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 10.—"It is radically socialistic and ought to be fought," William H. Taft said of the Plumb plan for the nationalization of the railroads, in a statement here tonight.

"I very much disapprove of the plan," he continued. "I am almost certain the Republicans will oppose the Plumb plan, and I hope the Democrats do too. We should not let the Soviet system gain even a toehold in America.

"I do believe in close supervision of the railroads, but such supervision as we have had has been too severe. We should give the railroads a chance, give them adequate revenues by proper rates, so they can attract the necessary capital for necessary maintenance and improvements. We have not allowed the rates to go up as they should."

Referring to the strikes of the railroad shopmen and the demands of other railroad unions for increased wages, he said:

"While I have not gone into the subject with the thoroughness to warrant a final judgment, I will say that from what I do know it seems to me that the men are requesting a greater increase than the percentage of increase in the cost of living warrants. Thus it appears they are asking more than they are entitled to receive."

strike when "A Voice in the Dark" was called.

Held Equity Contracts.

George Broadhurst, producer of "The Crimson Alibi," regards the closing of that production as particularly unjustified. Mr. Broadhurst last night called attention to the fact that the ten actors who went on strike in his company all had received Equity contracts, and that these contracts did not even contain the customary two weeks' dismissal clause, but were for "the run of the play." Disputes were to be subject to arbitration. The actors who held these contracts, and struck nevertheless, were Harrison Hunter, George Graham, Bertha Mann, Robert Kelly, Robert Barratt, Jack Ellis, (not an Equity member, but hired under an Equity contract;) Roy La Rue, Magda Foy, Edna James, and Catharine Cozzens.

"The point to be brought up in this connection," said Mr. Broadhurst, "is this: if, at the request of the Actors' Equity Association, the actors can break their own written contracts, how can we place any confidence in any contracts which they may make in the future?"

Anthony Hughes, one of the picketers arrested in front of the Winter Garden on Saturday night, was fined $25 by Magistrate Blau yesterday. The case of Sydney Jarvis, who was also arrested, was postponed until tomorrow. Both Hughes and Jarvis are former Winter Garden actors.

The Shuberts declared that Ralph Herz, who joined the Equity Association on Friday, had since rescinded his action. Herz was one of the principal comedians of the Winter Garden. It was announced also at that office that there had been little falling off in the number of players applying for engagements, and that telegrams were pouring in to managers from stock actors all over the country, asking for opportunities on Broadway.

At the offices of the Actors' Equity Association the striking players had their own side of the situation to present, and insisted that the outlook for the players never had been so favorable as now. The number of new members which the Equity Association had received since the beginning of the strike, inclusive of the chorus girls' branch, was placed at approximately 2,000 by Grant Stewart, the association's Recording Secretary.

"We have just taken off our coats," said Frank Gilmore, Executive Secretary. "The assistance of the stagehands is not at all necessary; we would appreciate it, of course, but we do not require it. We think we can win alone."

B. R. T. Man to Address Chorus Girls.

P. J. O'Shea, who has been handling the strike of the B. R. T. employes, will address a meeting of the chorus girls under Equity auspices some time this afternoon. The place for the meeting has not yet been selected.

A series of strike benefits probably will begin this week. The shows will be given by the stars and other players now on strike. For these entertainments, of course, the actors will not be able to secure any Broadway theatres and may reopen Daly's or appear in one of the Hebrew houses affiliated with the A. F. of L.

A rehearsal of "The Gold Diggers," one of David Belasco's prospective productions of the new season, is scheduled to begin this morning, but nearly all of the leading members of the company are Equity members, and there is no doubt that they will be called out. Among the Equity members of the cast are Ina Claire, Bruce McRae, the Equity's Vice President; H. Reeves-Smith, Johyna Howland, Beverly West, and Louise Galloway.

Raymnd Hitchcock, the actors declared, has informed the association that he is with it in the present fight. Mr. Hitchcock had previously been quoted as saying that the strike was foolish.

As an instance of the loyalty of members, an Equity official cited the case of an actor, whose top salary had previously been $75 a week, who was offered $250 a week for a period of three years if he would take the place of a striker. The offer, it was said, was declined.

Surprises Promised.

Both actors and managers insist that the opposition will be treated to a surprise tonight, but refused to discuss details. The managers, it is known, will reopen a number of their affected shows—among them probably "Listen, Lester," "A Voice in the Dark," and perhaps "East Is West," "The Five Million," and "Lightnin'." Equity officials pointed out that the mere reopening of houses will not constitute a victory for the managers, since it will always be possible for the Equity to enlist members among the new casts and thus compel the managers to close their attractions again upon short notice.

It was hinted also at Equity headquarters that one or more of the three plays announced to open this week might not have its première as planned, but the managers insisted that the plays would open with their casts complete.

A possibility tonight is the calling out of the Equity members in the cast of the Ziegfeld "Follies." Doubt exists at present as to whether Mr. Ziegfeld is a member of the Producing Managers' Association, but it is understood that he will be asked today to take a definite position.

The Hippodrome show, now in rehearsal, has not been interfered with.

Some Berlin Observers Think Aim Is to Restore Dual Monarchy.

RUMANIANS ARE DEFIANT

General Refuses to Receive Allied Protest—Act as If They Intended to Stay.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 10.—Politicians here say that events in Budapest must be regarded as an attempt to resurrect the monarchy and ascribe it mainly to intrigues by Emperor Charles's mother-in-law, the Princess of Parma, and Franchet d'Esperey, commanding general of the French Oriental Army, who for several weeks, it is asserted, has played the part of protector of the Szegedin Government. Reports from Vienna, Budapest, and Switzerland to members of the Austrian and Hungarian nobility living in Berlin seem to confirm this assertion.

For months former Emperor Charles's residence was the centre of a large number of more or less voluntarily exiled noblemen of the old régime and of politicians and capitalists conspiring to resuscitate the old Hapsburg monarchy in some form. The Szegedin Government, too, was in constant connection with those around the ex-monarch, while the two Princes of Parma have acted as diplomatic agents in Paris, and it is asserted also obtained the English King's consent to the Budapest coup. Archduke Joseph is supposed to retire later in favor of ex-Emperor Charles, whose aspiration, it is said, is to rule over a new Danube federation.

The Berlin papers publish interviews with Count Bethlen, the Szegedin Government, and members of the Budapest Government, all of whom state that a national convention, elected on the broadest and most liberal base, will decide the future form of the Hungarian Government, but neither these papers nor any responsible Berlin politicians believe in the honesty of these statements and the German reactionaries, though still rather reserved, express the conviction that "the Hungarian people, who suffered so much from republican institutions, will gladly return to the monarchy."

The reason why the German reactionary parties show so little enthusiasm is, firstly, because the leaders believe that the royalist movement is premature, at least so far as Germany is concerned. They believe much blood will yet be shed even in Hungary, not to speak of the new Slav States, and perhaps Austria, before the monarchy is re-established. Secondly, the genuine German reactionaries heartily dislike the House of Hapsburg, and much as they desire it they would have to owe the resurrection of the monarchy to the Hapsburgs.

According to latest reports, the Royalists seem to have established a sort of branch quarter at the Hotel Sacher, Vienna, where princes and counts, and generals, in their gorgeous old-time uniforms, believe as did the officers of Francis Joseph, and where the Budapest Joseph's name is never mentioned except in conjunction with "His Royal Highness."

There also are reports from numerous Hungarian cities and towns of Jew baiting that threatens to assume a pogrom character, the masses starting with shouting Bela Kun's underlings, and ending with looting the houses of rich Jews.

VIENNA, Aug. 9.—Advices from Czechoslovakia indicate that the Czechs are greatly exercised over the events in Hungary.

The fear is being expressed there that the advent of Archduke Joseph as Governor of the State is the thin end of a monarchistic wedge which may be driven into Central Europe.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 9. (Associated Press.)—There is much uneasiness at Prague, where the Socialist organ Pravoliou declares that no Communist Government could be so dangerous to the Czech State as Archduke Joseph's rule.

Talk of Differences With Entente.

BERLIN, Aug. 10.—Sharp differences of opinion already are manifesting themselves among the Hungarians, Austrians and representatives of the Entente. Even the Czechs in far-off Prague are balking, and the Hungarians are frankly worried, believing that a return of a monarchy is inevitable.

The Tageblatt's special correspondent in Budapest describes the Hungarian Generals as suddenly returning to their gold-crusted, colorful uniforms, and says the old militarism is springing up around the Palatin. On the contrary, Archduke Joseph's adviser, Count Stefan Bethlen, in an interview, says the correspondent, has declared again that the new Government will be composed of representatives of all classes—workmen, bourgeoisie and agriculturists, and that the future Cabinet will restore order. The correspondent adds that Count Bethlen still fails to answer directly the question whether there will be a monarchy, preferring to pass the responsibility to the new Government.

Bethlen, during the interview, referred to the "historic Hungarian character" as proof that Hungary "will not, cannot and must not go under."

"Saturated with the spirit of the new era and filled with democratic spirit," he continued, "Hungary will attempt to lift herself from the ground and enter the ranks of productive peoples."

A number of Hungarian statesmen left Vienna for Budapest Friday on a special train placed at their disposal by the Entente, says a dispatch from Berlin. The party included M. Lovascec, Count Stefan Bethlen, representing the counter-revolutionary Government at Szegedin, and Paul Garami, the Socialist leader and former Minister of Justice.

Joseph Says Assembly Will Decide.

BUDAPEST, Aug. 7. (Associated Press.)—"It is impossible to say whether the future Government of Hungary is to be monarchial or republican," said Archduke Joseph, the new Governor of State, to the correspondent this evening. "That question is to be decided solely by the National Assembly which is to be elected immediately the Rumanians leave the country.

"It is impossible to attempt the holding of elections during Rumanian occupation. The elections, when held, will be conducted on the system of universal franchise. Every man and woman over twenty-four years of age will have the right to vote.

"The present situation in Hungary is most critical. The Rumanians have stopped the operation of the railways, telegraph and telephones and are preventing food from reaching Budapest. The new Hungarian Government will not negotiate with the Rumanians, but will rely on the Entente."

Premier Friedrich, interviewed tonight, said:

"The removal of the Peidll Cabinet was essential, because it was really a Bolshevist body. Archduke Joseph came to Budapest at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, escorted by Hungarian officers, and conferred with the British General, Gordon; the American Colonel, Ley, and the Italian Colonel, Romanelli, and then formed a Cabinet consisting entirely of bureaucrats.

"The Archduke again conferred at 2 o'clock this morning with the heads of the allied missions, reaching a satisfactory agreement. The Rumanians did not participate in the conferences."

Archduke Joseph's movement originated chiefly in the aristocratic and official circles without reference to organized labor or the peasantry. It evidently is of a strongly Royalist character and the Hungarian officers are again wearing their smartest uniforms and all their decorations.

The Archduke's signature to his recent proclamation, "Archduke Joseph, Field Marshal," has been the subject of much comment, as hitherto he has described himself simply as "Joseph Hapsburg." His sudden intervention is viewed apprehensively by thoughtful politicians, who regard it as premature.

RUMANIAN COMMANDER DEFIED GEN. GORDON

Declined to Receive Letter of Protest Against Excesses of Troops.

LONDON, Aug. 9. (Associated Press.)—General Gordon, British representative on the Interallied Military Commission appointed by the Allies to arrange a settlement at Budapest, visited the Rumanian commander at Budapest Friday to protest against the excesses of the Rumanian troops, according to advices from Vienna. The commander declined to accept General Gordon's letter of protest.

BUDAPEST, Aug. 7.—The Rumanians are assuming control of the administration, and apparently intend remaining. The press censorship is most severe, and a majority of the papers have suspended. The Rumanians suppressed announcements from Paris that four Entente Generals were coming to Budapest.

Rumanian soldiers are said to be robbing houses and persons and to be permitting excesses in the province. They have arrested several hundred residents of Budapest, mostly Jews, who are suspected of Bolshevist connections. Czecnay, leader of the Bolsheviki under the late Tibor Szamuely, has been captured at Stuhlweizburg.

The Rumanians have swept the country bare of provisions for miles around Budapest. The American food mission at Vienna, in response to urgent appeals, has undertaken to feed the school children of Budapest.

RUMANIANS IN TEMESVAR.

Population of Banat Said to Have Welcomed Them Enthusiastically.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—An official communication from Bucharest says that Rumanian troops entered Temesvar in Banat, southern Hungary, last Sunday.

The communication says that the reception of the Rumanians by the population of the town was indescribable.

Temesvar was formerly a royal free city of Hungary, lying on the Bega Canal, seventy-two miles northeast of Belgrade, capital of Serbia. Banat is one of the most fertile districts in Europe, being famous for the quantity and excellence of its wheat.

BERNE, Aug. 10. (Havas.)—From Rumanian sources it has been learned that 60,000 rifles, machine guns and grenades, hidden by the Bulgarians during the operations in the province of Dobrudja, Rumania, have been found and confiscated.

JEWS BEATEN IN BUDAPEST.

Students with Dog Whips Also Flog ex-Communist Officials.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 9. (Associated Press.)—Two hundred students, armed with dog whips, yesterday stormed the Town Hall in Budapest and thrashed the Communist officials still there, says a dispatch from the Hungarian capital, by way of Berlin.

The students afterward attacked Jews and there were many collisions between Jewish and non-Jewish students near the university.

BUDAPEST, Aug. 8. (Associated Press.)—Anti-Jewish feeling is of the strongest in Budapest. Many Jews have been beaten in the streets, after having been dragged from cabs and tram cars, the Rumanian troops looking on laughingly and inciting the Hungarians to further attacks on the Jews.

Stephen Friedrich, the new Premier, in an interview today declared that persons guilty of robbery or murders would be tried by the proper courts.

"Szamuely's hangmen and the horrible company of Lenin's Boys have been arrested, but not a hair of their heads has been injured," said Friedrich, adding: "They will have to answer for their crimes in the regular courts."

The Premier has issued a proclamation to the population urging it not to use the developments of the situation for racial persecutions.

None of the newspapers in Budapest is publishing owing to a paper shortage.

The workmen in various Budapest factories have held a meeting and voted to return to work at less pay than was guaranteed them by the Soviet Government.

ALLIED NOTE UNANSWERED.

Text Shows It Was Much Stronger Than Was Supposed.

PARIS, Aug. 10, (Associated Press.)—American delegates stated tonight that the Peace Conference was still without a direct reply from the Rumanian Government to the note the Supreme Council sent on Aug. 6, relative to the armistice the Rumanians sought to impose on Hungary and which was much stronger than at first supposed.

It stated that the Peace Conference was compelled to believe the Rumanian Government determined to defy the conference and separate itself from the allied and associated Governments, and requested Rumania to deny by acts, and not by words, the charges made against her. The note read as follows:

"Following the fall of the Bela Kun Government and its displacement by a Socialistic Government, the Supreme Council on Aug. 5 sent to Budapest a commission of four allied Generals to enforce the armistice of November, 1918, and also to meet the heads of the Rumanian and Serbian armies in order to protect the occupied territory and regulate the conditions of occupation. These decisions were brought to the attention of the Hungarian Government by telegram, and at the same time to the Rumanian Generals, the Rumanian Government, and the Serbian Government.

"On Aug. 6, the Supreme Council, having heard that the Rumanian authorities at Budapest proposed to impose on the Hungarian Government an armistice contrary to the armistice concluded in November with Hungary in the name of the allied powers and in violation of the general rights of the Allies in so far as reparations are concerned, advised the Rumanian Government that it refused to recognize the right of the Rumanian Generals to conclude an armistice without the authorization of the allied powers.

"At the same time the Rumanian Government was placed on its guard against taking any action contrary to humanity or to its authority which might be committed by Rumanian troops, the council also demanding that the Rumanian General-in-Chief be given orders to conform to the directions of the commission of generals representing the Conference and acting by delegated authority.

"The Peace Conference has not yet received a direct reply from the Rumanian Government. It learns that the Rumanian generals refuse to comply with the instructions of the allied generals and have prevented publication of the telegram addressed by the President of the Peace Conference to the Hungarian Government.

"They also are permitting their soldiers to pillage private property and have requisitioned and are sending into Rumania live stock and rolling stock, submitting Budapest to an unnecessary blockade which is starving the city. They are destroying the railway lines, in particular one from Budapest to Vienna. In fact, they are committing a series of actions which are as much in violation of the decision of the conference as of the rights of the allied and associated powers, and likewise, primarily, of humanity.

"The Supreme Council learns at the same time that the socialist Hungarian Government was overthrown by a coup d'etat, its members arrested, and the Government replaced by one having Archduke Joseph at its head. In view of these facts, the conference is compelled to believe the Rumanian Government is determined to defy the conference and separate itself from the allied and associated powers.

"In the event that the conference errs in this belief, it requests the Rumanian Government to deny these statements at once, not by words, but by actions which can publicly prove that Rumania accepts and is ready to execute in good faith the policy decided upon by the conference."

RUSSIAN PRISONERS DECORATED HARRIES

Head of American Military Mission in Berlin Has a Little Medal With a Story.

SAVED OFFICERS FROM REDS

When German Staff Was Bent on Sending Them Home to Death He Intervened Forcefully.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Aug. 9.—General John J. Pershing walked into the lobby of the Coblenz Hof and met Brigadier General George H. Harries, head of the American Military Mission at Berlin.

"How are you?" said the commanding General. "How's Berlin and what's that new decoration, you're wearing?"

"That," replied General Harries, "is the Russian Medal of St. George."

"How did you get it?" asked General Pershing, fondling the little metal square. "I didn't give it to you."

And then General Harries, who had to be assisted by other American officers from Berlin, because General Harries is a modest man, told the story of how he came to be wearing one of five such decorations in existence.

As the chief of the American Military Mission in Berlin, General Harries, together with other allied representatives, was interested in the repatriation of Russian prisoners of war held in Germany. He superintended the guarding of the Russian prison camps undertaken by the American Army and did his best to look out for the interests of these rather unfortunate people.

Along in March the Germans decided to begin getting rid of some of the Russians. In accord with that plan they marshalled 3,000 Russian officers, loaded them un to a train and started them homeward. These officers and their trains were taken by Bolsheviki, who gave them the option of becoming Bolshevist officers or dying. According to official information all except a few refused point-blank, knowing that other Russian officers who joined the Bolsheviki as a subterfuge on reaching home had had their families killed in retaliation. When the 3,000 Russian officers refused to join the Reds a horrible massacre was begun, and but a small part of the 3,000 escaped with their lives.

In April the Germans prepared to send another lot of 5,000 Russian officers homeward by the same route. News of what had happened to the former consignment was known to the Germans and also to the Russians. Incidentally, it was known to General Harries made it his business to take it Berlin. The protest of the Russian officers about to be sent into what looked like almost certain death reached the ears of the allied officers. General Harries made it is musiness to take it up. He laid the matter before representatives of the German General Staff in charge of repatriation of Russian officers and he eet forth that it would not only be inhumane but it would be unwise for the Germans to send those 5,000 Russian officers on the proposed trip.

The next day a high German officer representing the German General Staff was again in conference with General Harries. At the conclusion of the talk he said: "I will lay your request before the German General Staff."

"Request nothing," declared General Harries [the Russians are not] "to be sent as planned by the German General Staff."

The German officer went on his errand.

The next day it was announced that the 5,000 Russian Officers would not be sent homeward owing to the development of unforeseen difficulties.

When the news of their salvation reached the Russian officers, many of them of high rank, and after they learned who had saved them, a delegation waited on General Harries to express their gratification.

With tears in their eyes, they assured him that he had saved their lives, as they would not have joined the Bolsheviki and would doubtless have been murdered, as were their comrades. The spokesman of the delegation, General Potocki, stepped up to General Harries and pinned on his breast a little metal square of the Order of St. George. It bore Roman numerals. General Potocki explained that the medal had been worn by his father and that the XL meant his father had served forty years as general officer in the Russian Army and had bequeathed the medal to his son.

General Potocki told General Harries that there was then no Russian Government to reward him, but that he must accept the medal and that when there was again a decent Russian Government the award would be made a matter of official record. So General Harries wore the medal.

At his instigation the five thousand officers were scattered among the Russian prison camps and aided in bettering them.

When the story had been told to General Pershing, General Harries turned to him and said: "This is not authorized by our War Department. Am I entitled to wear this decoration?"

"My, yes," said Pershing. "I wish I could wear it. You did the right thing."

General Harries was a retired Major General when the entrance of the United States into war found him a member of the contracting firm of H. M. Byllesby Company of Chicago. He has won a fine reputation for his work in his difficult position at Berlin.

GERMAN CABINET NEARING A CRISIS

Serious Friction Shown at Weimar Between Centrists and Majority Socialists.

WEIMAR, Aug. 8, (Associated Press.) The National Assembly reconvened on Thursday after a short vacation for its final work prior to taking its long postponed Summer rest. Large numbers of important bills will come up for passage, notably taxation legislation, which takes first place in public attention because it is more radical than anything Germany ever attempted.

The session began with every indication of a tense situation between the Centrists and the Majority Socialists, which it is considered may easily develop into a crisis. Mathias Erzberger, Vice Premier and Minister of Finance, is the storm centre, if he should be defeated it would mean the collapse of the entire Centrist-Socialist government that now is holding on by such a narrow thread.

To intensify the situation the Majority Socialists are not a complete unit. A portion of the party objects strongly to the new taxes. Friction between the two major parties constituting the present government was evident all through yesterday, when a veritable flood of resolutions on all conceivable subjects was introduced, and nearly all of them defeated systematically.

NITTI ASKS OUR AID TO BUILD UP ITALY

Showing Heavy Drain of War, He Says There Is a Great Field for American Business.

A POLICY OF FRIENDSHIP

Hopes for Adjustment of the Adriatic Claims and Expresses Confidence in Wilson.

ROME, Aug. 8, (Associated Press.)—Francesco Nitti, the Italian Premier, in an interview today dealt at length with Italy's efforts in the war and her ambitions for the future. Particular stress was laid by the Premier on Italy's desire for closer economic relations with the United States. He declared that Italy was ripe for development by American business.

"I find no difficulty in speaking plainly," said Signor Nitti to the correspondent. "Having been in America and seen the work that America has done in all branches of human endeavor, I know something of the great institutions that she has built up, industrially, socially and politically. It is, therefore, with a feeling of great pleasure that I communicate to Americans this message as the head of the Italian government.

"My sentiments toward America are known to all there. There cannot be any doubt about them. I have the stern conviction that one of the essential tasks of my Government will be the establishment not only of most cordial relations with the United States but a genuine admission by the two peoples that there is a community of ideals and sentiments directed toward the common conception of democracy.

"There is no conflict of interest between us. We are today two democracies striving for a still further realization of the benefits of free governments."

Continuing, Signor Nitti said:

"Italy's past fills pages of history with glory and renown. In a democracy one does not live upon the vanished past, but upon the work and effort which the past created—which the present must strive at all costs to perpetuate. It is in this task that the Governments of today are most deeply concerned—the building and restoring of the material wrecks of war to insure healthier enjoyment of the principles so clearly defined.

Italy's War Losses.

"It was in that aim to perpetuate free institutions that Italy threw in her all. No country suffered more from the conflict or made the sacrifice with greater will. Half a million dead testify in silence more strikingly than any other evidence to Italy's sterling spirit. A million disabled, living in pain, constitute another of our offerings in the cause of freedom. Five and a quarter million men went out to battle out of a 35,000,000 population in 1915. Every available man in Italy was called to the colors.

"Had America been called upon to contribute this proportion she would have summoned 16,000,000 men to arms. Italy's army was given willingly, eagerly, on the altar of liberty to bear witness that right is more precious than peace.

"Before the war our annual national debt amounted to $3,000,000,000; our advent into the war has seen it rise to $16,000,000,000. In comparison with other countries' war debts it might not seem stupendous, but, when keeping in mind Italy's resources, it represents the greatest sacrifice of them all. Italy's national wealth aggregated but $20,000,000,000. We surrendered all but one-fourth of it in the war, and had we been called upon for further sacrifices we would have willingly given, even to the limit of our existence.

"Italy entered the war, accepting all its sorrows and all its dangers. Several times she was on the point of failing. Italy, contrary to the spirit of the treaty concluded with the Allies, remained a long time alone against Austria-Hungary, facing one of the greatest armies of the world, outnumbering that of Italy by 100,000 men, more powerful in artillery and stronger in strategic position.

"Our military forces during those trying days fought, with a spirit unhampered, hardship and privation, due to love for enduring liberty. Inconceivable difficulties as regards supplies and transport were overcome so magnificently that the world stood aghast at the Herculean achievements in engineering accomplished by our forces operating on the cold, snow-capped Alps and along the bitter, frigid Piave.

"There was not one atom of endeavor that we withheld in seeking victory. We have [offered?] our homes, our youth, our wealth, our all, that small nations might exercise their right of government, that the self-determination of peoples might be perpetuated.

No Serious Labor Unrest.

"Long years in the trenches made the men of the allied armies returning to civil life nervous and restless. We see evidences of it all over the world. We have had sporadic cases of unrest in Italy, but none serious enough to warrant undue alarm. All attempts at general strikes have proved to be great failures. The Italians are settling down to the realization that the guarantee of the future of their country is to be found in greater production of human economic wants and a return to normal commercial conditions.

"The problem of the high cost of living will be brought near solution when the industrial groups have accepted this need for increased output, and as long as this feeling permeates the mass of the Italian people fear of a revolution of Asiatic Bolshevism will be unfounded.

"To insure this greater production we find ourselves handicapped by a shortage of material with which to recoup our industries and resume our normal operations. Be assured that when once the channels of trade begin to assume their ordinar functions and Italy receives the raw material and food necessary to keep her industrial processes in operation there need be no countenancing of disaster or violence within the country.

"Intermittent isolated cases of violence with which Italy has been visited during recent months have been the result of reaction from a war to a peace basis, and therefore are not indicative of the normal feeling of the Italian people.

"Italy does not want a revolution, and, above all, her working classes do not want it. My cherished ambition is that the workmen's leaders should participate in the affairs of Government, persevering persistently to solve the problems of increased production and better living conditions for the families of workers.

"These would constitute a veritable bulwark against the violent intransigeants whose like have been asserting themselves in all parts of the world. It is sound policy that strict guardianship of public order must be assured. There is no democracy without order.

Finances and American Relations.

"Our war debt of $16,000,000,000 is being met with fortitude and stoicism that belittles the gigantic efforts of other countries. The nation, to pay for this war, is groaning under the burden, but it is bearing it with great determination. Our last budget aggregated nearly $2,000,000,000, so that the annual per capita tax for every man, woman, and child in Italy approximated $45. I believe that figure challenges the record for high taxation in any allied country, but we hope to be able to reduce the budget to about $1,500,000,000.

"Despite our high taxation during the war, another measure which will insure our financial stability is before the country. We are arranging for the collecting of additional taxation in the form of a progressively graduated levy on incomes. Announcement of the Cabinet's purpose in this direction had its immediate effect on Government securities, which have increased in value ever since this program was made public.

"Our courage in facing our debt, we hope, will be rewarded by national financial firmness which will stand unquestioned. We purpose to begin, as early as is consistent with sound economic commercial policy, a genuine reduction in our paper currency amounting to $2,000,000,000. We anticipate in the course of a few years Italy's return to pre-war conditions, when our paper money was held at a premium on gold.

"The interest of America in Italy must heighten when the great markets that are offered here are considered. Before the war Italy's foreign commerce amounted to more than a billion dollars. This was divided chiefly among the European powers, with Germany leading all the rest, both in imports and exports. The war left this market in a chaotic state. It is now ready for exploitation for American business, ready, open-armed for all their wares, and longing for commercial intercouse which will alike benefit both the United States and Italy.

"We need raw materials for industrial enterprises which will allow us to restore our industry. We need foodstuffs, fats, coal and semi-finished materials. Our country is teeming with industrial possibilities. The streams from the Alps and the Apennines contain enough unbridled electric force to supply the needs of a continent. There is an ebundance of labor ready to set its hand to the plow or the forge. Italy is the great gateway in the Mediterranean basin connecting the Balkans, Southern Russia, Asia Minor and Egypt to Western Europe and the Americas.

"Our hearts and hopes are extended to America, where many of Italy's sons contribute their skill and toil, to America, for whom many of Italy's sons fought with no unworthy prowess the battle just concluded.

"Italy's aims are not imperialistic. She must defend her nationality. It is inherent in her, it is something that no power, either on earth or in heaven, can take away. Our anxiety is still lingering that our peoples in the Adriatic might have the right to assert their choice to be part and parcel of their motherland. We are trusting that President Wilson's scholarly and energetic mind will assist us in reaching some agreement which will preserve the unity of the Italian peoples.

"We look for America to guarantee us a region in Asia Minor where we may secure raw materials and foodstuffs for our rapidly increasing population, which within a few years will aggregate 50,000,000 and the density of which is now more than 350 inhabitants to the square mile.

"In conclusion, I have personal sincere confidence in President Wilson, as the representative of American democracy. I desire that it be known that the Italian Government steers toward a greater democracy, a greater nationality, an impregnable empire of financial firmness, placing unbreakable faith in the will of the Italian people to work and sacrifice for the right."

GERMAN ENVOY TELLS OF AUSTRIAN PEACE BID

Count Wedel's Version of the Meeting of General Smuts and Count Mensdorff.

BERLIN, Aug. 9. (Associated Press.)—Count von Wedel, former German Ambassador to Austria-Hungary, has made public another chapter of the attempts at peace-making while hostilities were in progress. This concerns an alleged conference between General Jan Christian Smuts on behalf of David Lloyd George, the British Prime Minister, and Count Mensdorff, former Austrian Ambassador to Great Britain, for Count Czernin, the former Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister.

Czernin, says Count Wedel, had great confidence in Mensdorff because Mensdorff was popular in London. Czernin regretted that Mensdorff tried to prevent the war, but he gave the former Ambassador explicit instructions "to ask immediately whether a general peace was possible and whether peace for Germany was possible."

"In case the answer is yes," Count Wedel quotes Czernin as saying, "suggest that German representatives be drawn into the conference. In case the answer is no, further discussion will be useless."

"General Smuts replied," von Wedel asserts, "by saying that peace could not be discussed with Germany. He admitted that he believed the German Army could not be vanquished, but he insisted the time had not come for a parley with Germany."

Count Wedel said he believed the only time when Great Britain and France be ready considered peace was in the Summer of 1917, when the sinking of vessels by German submarines alarmed them. They intended to go to Italy to confer concerning the possibility of a rapprochement, but gave up the idea as a result of the news arriving from Austria.

Von Wedel said he did not know what terms Great Britain and France would have offered, but he questioned whether it would have been the status quo.

Von Wedel quotes a high British officer, who was in Vienna last Fall, who praised the Germany Army. The officer is said to have declared that Premier Lloyd George had reached the conviction that no peace understanding was possible because supremacy in Europe was at stake. Though Lloyd George originally was anxious for peace, according to the officer, it was not because he feared defeat, but rather the effect on Europe and England of a long conflict.

Count von Wedel said he believed that those who thought there was a possibility of a peace understanding during the last two years of the war overestimated the possibilities of the situation.

The fact that General Smuts had a meeting with Count Mensdorff in Switzerland was brought out in April, 1918, when Premier Clemenceau denied a statement of Count Czernin to the effect that the Allies had tried to open peace negotiations. Subsequent reports of this meeting said it lasted only a few minutes, and ended abruptly, when Mensdorff gave an evasive reply to a direct question from General Smuts, who asked if Austria wanted to make a separate peace. Clemenceau, in his public statement, said Austria sought the interview.

BEGINS MARNE BRIDGE.

General Howze Lays Cornerstone of Structure to be Built by Americans.

CHATEAU THIERRY, France, Aug. 10. (Associated Press.)—Major Gen. Robert L. Howze today laid the first stone of the new bridge which is to be constructed over the Marne River, funds for which were raised by the American Society for the Relief of Devastated France.

The old bridge was blown up by the American 3d Division on the night of May 31-June 1, 1918, to stop the German thrust toward Paris. The impressive ceremony was attended by Brig. Gen. F. W. Sladen of the 5th Division, and many other American officers; General Maigneleo of the French Army, local notabilities and the entire population of Chateau Thierry.

DEAD IN SAXON RIOTS MOSTLY SOLDIERS

About Eighty Killed to Ten Civilians, and 200 Wounded Against Fifty.

SUPPORTS REACH CHEMNITZ

Order in City Restored and Important Buildings Held by Government Forces.

CHEMNITZ, Saxony, Aug. 10, (Associated Press.)—Sixty to eighty soldiers were killed and 200 wounded in the fighting during the food riots Friday, according to private estimates here. Ten civilians were killed and fifty were wounded.

The city is now quiet and trains are running.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 9, (Associated Press.)—Comparative quiet has been restored at Chemnitz, Saxony, where fifty persons were killed Friday during food riots inspired by Spartacide agitators, according to advices from Berlin.

Various important buildings are still in the hands of the Government forces, but the majority of the troops have withdrawn behind the Auerswalde-Oberlichtenau line.

Further Government reinforcements have arrived on the outskirts of Chemnitz. Negotiations with the rioters are in progress.

REFUGEES IN SIBERIA DYING IN TRAINS

Typhus and Hunger Take Terrible Toll of People Fleeing from Red Invasion.

OMSK, July 29, (Associated Press.)—It is estimated that more than a 100,000 refugees have passed through Omsk during the last fortnight, and every day new thousands of them reach here in flight. The freight yards are filled with equipment, stores and materials brought from the portions of the west that have been evacuated.

The already serious situation is aggravated by the side-tracking in the midst of the trains of families of peasants, and railway, factory and other workers, still further trains containing sick and wounded persons from hospitals. There have been instances where entire trains have been side-tracked with typhus victims, many of them in a dying condition. Every night numbers of dead are removed from trains, some of them having perished from starvation.

The Russian Red Cross and Zemstvo committees are lacking in virtually all the necessities for caring for the sick, but have established feeding stations with a capacity sufficient to care for all those who are able to leave the trains. The American Red Cross with its reduced personnel is giving the best possible aid, supplying garments and medicaments to the people.

An allied anti-typhus train is giving baths to hundreds of persons daily, and the personnel of the trains is engaged in fumigating cars in which there have been typhus cases.

Reports received here from Tyumen, the oldest Russian town in Siberia, say that the roads from the west are filled with refugees, the bulk of whom were handled by boats on the Tabol River.

JAPANESE PRESS FIRM ON SHANTUNG AWARD

Regards the Senate Opposition as Political—Negotiations with China Reported.

TOKIO, Aug. 7, (Associated Press.)—The newspapers generally are treating calmly in their editorial comment the various phases of the debate in the United States Senate on the question of Shantung. The opinion most widely advanced is that the Republican Senators who are opposing the provision in the Peace Treaty relating to Shantung are using their arguments against Japan mostly for political purposes and with the idea of discrediting President Wilson.

The newspapers declare that no matter what action the Senate may take in the premises, it cannot affect Japan's interests as acquired under the treaty, which will be ratified by the other powers. The Yorodzu Choho expresses the fear that the "excessive anti-Japanese allegations will adversely affect the good relations between Japan and the United States, but says it considers the attitude of the Republicans as an attempt to "promote party interests."

After pointing out that it is Japan's intention to restore Shantung to China and to conduct economic undertakings in Shantung jointly with the Chinese, the Hochi Shimbun interprets the attitude of the Republican Senators as being based on America's desire to achieve a world economic conquest, including China, from which she desires to oust Japan economically.

The Jiji Shimpo says the Japanese Minister to China already has opened negotiations with China concerning Shantung. It adds that Japan is ready to make restitution of Shantung as soon as China is prepared to fulfill the terms of the dual agreement concerning Shantung, and that Japan will withdraw her troops and divide Taing-tao into three settlements, Japanese, Chinese, and International.

Don't Tell Dad

Magazine editors who praise their own literary offerings pile rapturous adjective upon adjective until they achieve a breathless "editorial blurb."

Unless they can promise something "startling, unique, electrical" that "ushers in a new era," there seems little use of saying anything.

And yet—there is a short, simple story in the September Delineator that should interest the fathers and mothers of boys and girls.

For some parents it may bring a new understanding.

This little story called "Don't Tell Dad" commences on page 22 of your September Delineator.

The men in the million Delineator homes will also be interested in "The Land of Bluff," an appreciation of America, by Ibanez, author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

ST. JOHN'S ALL ALERT TO GREET THE PRINCE

Newfoundland Port Adorned with Triumphal Arches of Fir Branches and Fish Barrels.

TO RESUME GREAT REGATTA

Britain's Future King Will Inaugurate New Era for Event Stopped by War.

By DOUGLAS NEWTON.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Aug. 10.—St. John's is full of the sweet clean smell of fir branches dragged from the high hills to make triumphal arches for the Prince of Wales's visit on Tuesday.

St. John's is lavish in arches. They span the main street and are perched across the roads that climb the steep slopes that cut the town. They are arches of pride. Some are great green castles in their coat of fir. Some are turrets and gates of fish barrels, tokens of the great codfishing industry. Some are hung with the splendid furs and feathers of Newfoundland hunting. The arches and the electric lights upon them and the vigorous reception program will make the Prince's one-day stay worth while.

St. John's is calmly conscious—calmness is a feature of St. John's—that it is taking its right place in the order of events. Could there be any question of the Prince going anywhere else first? they ask. Isn't Newfoundland the oldest as well as the most English of the colonies? And it is worth noting that the man who makes a point of this is usually an Irishman. There is much of the soft Irish brogue up and down the streets of St. John's, and there are many pretty Irish faces and fine complexions to vie with the flash of French blood that is apparent in many. But Irish or French or Scotch, Newfoundland comes first with all, for emigration touches Newfoundland little and most are native born.

St. John's sits between the thighs of two steep hills that form a fortress wall about its harbor basin, and jut out to make the high gateposts of the salty port to the Atlantic. It is a splendid natural harbor, but the town has been laboring under its disadvantages ever since the site was chosen. The streets have to fight their way up the steep hills and the town has been forced to straggle back for miles along the harbor waterfront.

Fishing Shacks Picturesque Sight.

The most picturesque quality of the town is given by the fishing shacks that are perched on every ledge of the rock at the harbor mouth. Tiny square frame cabins are propped on the rock by hundreds of spidery pole legs. Spider paths of wood battens sag and sway along the face of the cliff. Frail and gossamer platforms on frailer supports make drying grounds of the huge catches of cod. All are hanging over the water and the red and green and brown of the shacks against the green of the land have an almost Japanese effect.

The town itself labors uphill in a mass of causual buildings. The frame houses are innocent of suewalks. The houses pile upon the northern side of the harbor—the south hill has defeated the roadmaker—to the great twin towers of the Roman Catholic Cathedral, an immense pile spacious rather than beautiful and remarkable for the fact that it contains perhaps the only stained glass window in the world to depict Victorian feminine fashion, bustle and all.

There is not very much civacity in St. John's but there are plenty of motor cars. There are so many autos that they attract attention, and you ask if every citizen has one. They are rather proud of their cars not only as cars but as examples of how the modern spirit of Newfoundland triumphs over the import duty. There is an import duty on everything, for everything comes in by sea. It is heavy and Newfoundland chafes under it, but the city buys cars of all kinds and raises a proud head.

Cars of the latest make, carts that look like those poles the Indians trail from pony girths, put on wheels, those spidery buggies so familiar in the movies, women with fine poise and pretty faces in the latest jumper fashions, pass and repass along Water Street by the frame houses and the low shops. The effect is incongruous and novel, and, I suppose, essentially new world. It is as though men were so anxious to keep abreast of the times in themselves that they have no time to spare in building modern homes.

Perhaps the Newfoundlanders have little interest in anything but essentials. Men who go out to the Banks in weather a Cornish day, and ten minutes later is thick with a mist that veils in fog the landmarks and leaves them at the mercy of a bitter sea, men who push out through the bleak Winter across the flat "pans" of ice fields to hunt the seal and are caught in a blizzard and perish, as many do, have little use for trivialities.

Plan Royal Time for Prince.

They are, as I have said, rather a calm people who have a phlegmatic way of doing things, but they mean to give the Prince a good time. "He's quite a dandy feller, the Prince, eh?" said one. "We will give him a good time. We gave his grandfather a good time—he's going to sleep in the very bedroom occupied by his grandfather fifty-nine years ago in Government House—I guess we'll give this Prince a better time, sure."

And a girl with a radiant skin and wearing a jumper and what seemed to be the inevitable white boots and white silk stockings chimed in:

"I hear he's plush, this Prince. I wanter see him. We'll make him proud."

That is more than likely. The Prince is to see the port and all the arches and all the city. He will be lunched at the Government House and then will be swung away to Topsail, the brighton of St. John's, where, the mist being kindly, he will see the glories of Conception Bay and Newfoundland scenery. There is to be a dinner and a dance and a through the illuminated streets, and on Wednesday he will be present at the great regatta on Quidi Vidi Lake, a big fresh water stretch upon which the supreme fete of St. John's had been held since all time until the coming of the war. The first news of the war came in 1914, in the midst of the regatta, and since then there has been none, and it was fated that the Prince, and the Prince alone, should be the one to inaugurate it for a new era.

AFGHANISTAN ON PROBATION

Treaty with Britain Gives Six Months to Prove Good Intentions.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—A dispatch from Rawalpindi, British India, says that a peace treaty has been signed between Afghanistan and Great Britain.

While the men at the head of the rising are not to be punished for the moment, the Afghans are to have six months to show their sincerity towards Britain. The only penalty clauses of the treaty are the withdrawal of the Amir's subsidy and retraction of the privileges of importing arms and munitions from India. The ceremony of signing the treaty was without incident.

Sir Hamilton Grant, head of the British delegation, said that the treaty would put an end to a wanton and unprofitable war, preventing further bloodshed. He warned against a renewal of petty intrigues and in conclusion congratulated the Afghan delegates on their courteous attitude.

All Ahmed, the chief Afghan delegate, in his address declared that Afghan friendship was as essential to Great Britain as Britain's friendship was to the Afghans.

the 5th instant asking for an expression of its views as to the advisability of legislation providing for the gradual reduction of the currency in circulation as proposed by Senate resolution 142.

"The Board would suggest that, in determining whether or not legislation is necessary or desirable to regulate the volume of currency in circulation, consideration be given to the various forms of money which make up the sum total of our volume of currency. A distinction should also be drawn between the stock of money in the country and the amount actually in circulation.

"With respect to gold coin, gold certificates, standard silver dollars, silver certificates, subsidiary silver and treasury notes of 1890, the board assumes that it is recognized that no legislation is necessary.

"The United States notes, or legal tenders, which have remained at the fixed amount of $346,681,016, since March 31, 1878, have not been a disturbing factor since the passage of the act of March 14, 1900. An adequate gold reserve of more than 45 per cent. is now held against these notes, most of which are in the form of small bills of $1, $2, and $5 denominations. Notes of these denominations are needed in the daily transactions of the public, and were the United States notes to be retired the issue of an equal volume of small bills in some other form of currency would be necessary. To effect the retirement of the United States notes, funds would have to be withdrawn from the Treasury, to be supplied either by taxation or by the sale of interest-bearing obligations. The board does not believe that any legislation with respect to United States notes is necessary or desirable at this time.

"The national bank notes outstanding on Aug. 1, 1919, amounted to $658,-118,555, a reduction of nearly $60,000,000 since July 1, 1914. The greater part of these notes is secured by United States 2 per cent. bonds, and provision has already been made in Section 18 of the Federal Reserve Act for their gradual retirement.

"Federal Reserve bank notes, which are secured by United States obligations and are taxed just as national bank notes are, have been issued only to replace in part national bank notes retired, and standard silver dollars melted or broken up and sold as bullion under authority of the act of April 23, 1918, known as the Pittman act. The issues of these notes has, therefore, brought about no increase in the circulating medium.

"The amount of Federal Reserve notes outstanding has increased from $357,239,000 on April 1, 1917, to $2,504,-753,000 on Aug. 1, 1919. It appears, therefore, that those who see in the larger volume of circulation in the United States the prime cause of increased costs of living, and who seek a remedy by a forced contraction of the currency, must have in mind the Federal Reserve act and Section 16 of the Federal Reserve act as amended June 21, 1917, which provides for its issue and redemption.

"In analyzing our present monetary situation, and in considering the causes which have led to the expansion of credits and note issues during the war, we should not lose sight of some of the developments of the pre-war period and of their effect upon credits and prices.

Money in Circulation.

"The reserve money held by or for the Federal Reserve banks serves, of course, as a basis for credit, but it forms no part of the currency in circulation. Upon this basis the amount of money in circulation on July 1, 1914, (there being no Federal Reserve banks in operation at that time,) was $3,419,-108,368, made up as follows: Gold coin and certificates, $1,649,775,803; silver dollars and silver certificates, including Treasury notes of 1890, $352,203,600; all other currency, $1,217,188,955, being a circulation per capita of $34.53.

"The corresponding amounts of money in circulation on April 1, 1917; Dec. 1, 1918, and Aug. 1, 1919, are shown in the following table:

"Arguing that the date, Dec. 1, 1918, marks the beginning of the post-war period, the table shows changes during this period up to Aug. 1, 1919, as follows:

"Gold coin and certificates in circulation decreased $133,199,000; silver dollars and silver certificates, including Treasury notes of 1890, decreased $130,984,000; Federal Reserve notes decreased $162,-692,000, Federal Reserve bank notes increased $78,552,000, all other currency decreased $44,772,000, being a net decrease in circulation for the post-war period of $333,095,000, or $2.97 per capita.

"In considering the question of currency in circulation, there should be taken into account the various factors which have entered into the demand for currency, among which are the gradual enlargement of payrolls, both as to the number of workers and amount paid to each; the effect of higher wages upon deposits in banks, and upon the amounts of money carried by shopkeepers in their tills, and by individuals in their pockets; the amounts of money locked up or carried on their persons by workmen who have been receiving high wages, and who, especially in the case of ignorant foreigners, are unwilling to deposit their savings in banks or to invest in Government bonds; the amount of money carried away by workmen returning to their homes in foreign countries, and the fact that the circulating media of the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, Cuba, Porto Rico, Santo Domingo, Haiti, Honduras, Panama, and, in part, Mexico, includes United States paper currency and subsidiary silver. The amounts required in these countries, most of which are very prosperous, have greatly increased in the last few years.

Effect of Federal Reserve Notes.

"The total foreign circulation of United States currency cannot be stated accurately, but is estimated to be at least $150,000,000.

"The difficulty—indeed, the impossibility—of keeping in circulation an excessive volume of Federal Reserve notes should be understood. The issue of these notes has been carefully safeguarded by the Federal Reserve act, and ample provision has been made for their redemption. Federal Reserve notes are redeemable in gold; they cannot be forced into circulation in payment of the expenses of Government or for any other purpose, as they can be issued only in exchange for gold or against a deposit of negotiable paper growing out of a legitimate commercial transaction plus the required gold reserve of not less than 40 per centum. Upon payment of commercial paper which has been deposited to secure Federal Reserve notes there follows either an immediate return of an equal amount of notes to the bank or an automatic increase in the percentage of gold reserve available for their redemption. Federal Reserve notes are not legal tender, nor do they count as reserve money for member banks. They are issued only as a need for them develops, and as they become redundant in any locality they are returned to the Treasury at Washington or to a Federal Reserve Bank for redemption. Thus there cannot at any time be more Federal Reserve notes in circulation than the needs of the country at the present state of prices require, and as the need abates the volume of notes outstanding will be correspondingly reduced through redemption. The increased volume of Federal Reserve notes in circulation during the last three years, in so far as it is not the result of direct exchanges for gold and gold certificates which have been withdrawn from circulation, is the effect of advancing wages and prices, and not their cause.

Some Expansion Inevitable.

"There has undoubtedly taken place during the last two years a certain amount of credit expansion which, under the circumstances connected with our war financing, was inevitable, but this will be corrected as the securities issued by the United States Government for war purposes are gradually absorbed by investors. This credit expansion is equal to the difference between the total of the war expenditures of the Government on the one hand, and on the other the total amount raised by the Government through taxation and by the sale of its obligations so far as paid for out of savings. No reliable estimate can be made of this difference, which must be gradually absorbed through future savings for the reason that the banks are lending and will always lend freely on Government bonds as collateral.

"The principal cause of the advance of prices before and during the war was the urgent need of the Governments of the Allied countries for goods of all kinds, for quick delivery in large volume, and the competition of this buying by Governments with purchases by private individuals who failed to contract their expenditures at a rate commensurate with the growing expenditures of these Governments. In the post-war period, through which we are now passing, the country has experienced rising prices, owing, in part, to a general relaxation of the war-time régime of personal economy, resulting in an increased demand for commodities by individuals who restricted their purchases during the war but who are now buying in competition with export demand. In addition, accrued incomes and increased wages have led to heavy demands for commodities not of prime necessity, which have resulted in diverting labor and material from essentials to non-essentials.

"The Federal Reserve Board believes that any currency legislation at this time is unnecessary and undesirable, and would suggest that whether viewed from an economic or financial standpoint, the remedy for the present situation is the same, namely to work and to save; to work regularly and efficiently in order to produce and distribute the largest possible volume of commodities; and to exercise reasonable economies in order that money, goods, and services may be devoted primarily to the liquidation of debt and to the satisfaction of the demand for necessities, rather than to indulgence in extravagance or the gratification of a desire for luxuries. The war is over—in a military sense—and while the bills have been settled by loans to the Government, these obligations, so far as they are carried by the banks, must be absorbed before the war chapter of the financial history of the country can be closed.

"Very truly yours,
"W. P. G. HARDING,
"Governor."

Hon. George P. McLean, Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency, United States Senate, Washington, D. C."

Very heavy purchases of supplies of all kinds were made in this country by European belligerents during the years 1915 and 1916, payment for which involved the shipment to us of large amounts of gold. The stock of gold in the United States on July 1, 1914, was $1,890,678,304. This amount increased steadily until April, 1917, the date of our entry into the war, when it reached $3,068,904,808, an increase of about $1,200,000,000. Bank deposits likewise show a large increase, the net deposits of national banks having risen from $7,465,149,000 on June 30, 1914, to $10,-489,217,000 on March 5, 1917, while the net deposits of all banks in the United States increased from $17,066,150,000 in June, 1914, to $24,891,218,000 in June, 1917.

Total Stock of Money.

"Net deposits of national banks had further increased up to May 12, 1919, to $11,718,095,000, and those of all banks in June, 1918, (the latest date for which figures are available) to $26,769,546,000. Shortly after April 6, 1917, when the Congress declared war, the Treasury began to sell bonds, notes and certificates in large amounts, resulting in a net increase in the public debt to Aug. 1, 1919, of $24,518,084,840.

"On July 1, 1914, the total stock of money in the United States, exclusive of that held by the United States Treasury, was $3,419,168,368. On April 1, 1917, the stock of money, estimated on the same basis, was $4,702,130,941, an increase of $1,282,962,573, of which increase $883,481,028 was in gold.

"On July 1, 1914, there were no Federal Reserve notes in existence, while on April 1, 1917, there were outstanding $357,239,000.

"The amendment to the Federal Reserve act approved June 21, 1917, changed substantially the original reserve requirements for member banks and provided that their entire lawful reserve should be carried with the Federal Reserve Banks. The same amendment authorized the Federal Reserve Banks to exchange Federal Reserve notes for gold. The result of these two changes in the law was to tranfer immediately large sums of gold from the vaults of

Make Your Office Look Uniformly Successful

If you standardize on Cutler Desks your office will express success from the opening of the outermost door, straight through, and into your private office. No chance will be left to give a mixed impression. It will be uniformly good.

Harmony of design runs through all Cutler models. Whether it is a clerk's desk, a stenographer's or your own, your customers can at once see the Cutler standard of Craftsmanship. Each one of them expresses the success of your business, making a single, good impression.

Cutler Desks are the result of rare patience and skill practiced for three generations. Patience to perfect and skill to execute have steadily improved their efficiency and appearance—ever since the day when Abner Cutler invented the "roll top."

And ever since then an ideal has urged forward one improvement after another. That ideal is to make desks that express the success of successful men.

Many executives choose Cutler Desks made of South African Striped Mahogany; others prefer selected white Quartered Oak.

Shoe Mileage

The mileage you secure from your shoes should be figured as closely as tire mileage for your car.

A new pair of shoes every month, no matter at what price, is much more expensive than a pair of Hanan Shoes that wear for many months.

CHIHUAHUA REVOLT PLOT IS NIPPED

Carranza Garrison, Travelers Report, Was Preparing to Hand City Over to Villa.

LEADERS AND MEN JAILED

Some Said to Have Been Executed—One Colonel Escapes with Command and Goes to Join Rebels.

EL PASO, Aug. 10.—A plot to have the Chihuahua City Garrison revolt against the Carranza commanders and join Villa on Friday was discovered early on Wednesday morning, according to American and Mexican passengers arriving from Chihuahua City today.

A large number of Federal officers and soldiers were placed in the Federal penitentiary, charged with inciting a mutiny, the travelers said.

The passengers said they heard shots fired in the patio of the penitentiary before they left, and rumors said that leaders of the mutiny had been executed.

All telegrams and mail is being closely censored out of Chihuahua City, passengers stated, to prevent news of the attempted revolt reaching other parts of the State where Federal troops are stationed.

The plot, planned for several weeks, was discovered when two of the leaders went to Jimenez and Santa Rosalia to induce the garrisons there to revolt, passengers said.

An effort was made to have a Colonel Hernandez join, as he had recently been deprived of his command by General Miguel Dieguez. Instead, he telegraphed General Enrique Martinez, Chief of Staff to General Dieguez, details of the plot.

The plan was to have the garrison mutiny against loyal officers at reveille on Friday morning, send a courier to Villa, telling him to come and assume command of the troops and accept surrender of the city, the passengers said.

A Federal Colonel, learning of the discovery of the plot early on Wednesday, escaped with his command of 350 men and is reported marching to join Villa, south of Parral. Loyal troops are said to be pursuing the battalion. Trains have been annulled to prevent its escape.

FIRING ON AIRMEN DENIED.

Story of Mexican Attack on Patrol Near Yuma Discredited.

YUMA, Ariz., Aug. 10.—Reports were received here today that Mexican soldiers yesterday fired on American airplanes of the border patrol near Andrade, Lower California, Mexico, six miles west of here. S. N. Cromwell of Yuma, who spent all of yesterday within 1,000 yards of the scene of the reported clash, denied tonight that any such incident took place.

He is general Superintendent of construction of an irrigation work on the Colorado River.

Mr. Cromwell declared that many men employed on the work had heard unusual noises from the border patrol airplanes as they flew over on their way from Yuma to Rockfield, San Diego. He attributed reports that the airplanes had been fired on to these. He said the noises sounded to him "as though the motors were backfiring," but that they might have been caused by practice shots fired by the aviators from their machine guns.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 10.—Stung by adverse reports in the United States newspapers that Mexico was doing nothing to protect foreigners, Secretary of State, Manuel Aguirre Belanga has wired all State Governors instructions to push rapidly all cases where foreigners have been attacked. All cases, he says, must be pushed to the limit.

ASSERT PROHIBITION RAISED HOTEL RATES

QUOTE HOTEL PROPRIETORS

Figure High Rates Will Cost the Public $500,000,000 in the Next Year.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The Association Opposed to National Prohibition announces that an investigation it has made into the hotel phase of the high cost of living shows that "hotel rates have increased in every section of the country since July 1 from $1 to $7 per guest per day." This is attributed by the Association to prohibition.

"Hotel rate increases to cover deficiencies in earnings," said the statement, "caused by prohibition will cost the public approximately $500,000,000 during the next year. Results of the investigation show that there is hardly a section, whether in former 'wet' or 'dry' territory, that rate advances have not taken effect. In some cities hotels have made an initial advance and now contemplate further increases. The hotel rate increases started July 1 in Chicago and New York and the advances spread to all sections of the country."

Edward T. Tierney, Vice President of the Bowman Hotel Company and managing director of the Hotel Ansonia, New York, is credited by the Association with having said:

"Prohibition was bound to raise hotel rates. No money can be made from the sale of food; therefore, the revenue from the bars cut off, the loss of that revenue must of necessity be made up by charging more for the rooms."

The statement issued here today continues as follows:

"Harry Moir, of the Morrison Hotel, Chicago, says that his hotel had not yet raised its rate, but will do so shortly. The Morrison was the only large hotel which did not raise rates in Chicago after July 1.

"J. Stacy Hill of the Gibson Hotel, Cincinnati, where everything, including virtually turning hotels into department stores, with perfume, drugs, cafeteria, and soft drinks had been tried to make up the deficit caused by prohibition in Ohio, said the Ohio hotels had given the problem up and raised rates 12 per cent.

"Leonard H. Hicks, Chicago, President of the Greeters of America, justifies raises by hotels by declaring that the average hotel has not made more than 6 to 10 per cent., gross income, for a long time. The net income of from 3 to 6 per cent. has been so severely reduced by prohibition that the Chicago raises have been from 50 cents to $3 and $4 a day in the Blackstone, Lasalle, Stratford, Planters, Atlantic, and Brevoort hotels, and further advances in Chicago may come if war-time prohibition does not end soon and if the high cost of commodities and labor keeps up."

Belgians to Occupy Malmedy.

WON'T ALLOW MURPHY TO GO TO IRELAND

State Department Said to Have Refused to Amend Passport of Irish Delegate in Paris.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—John Archdeacon Murphy, in charge of the Paris-American "Commission for the Independence of Ireland," has been notified by the Passport Bureau here that his American passport cannot be amended to permit him to go to Ireland. He applied two weeks ago, but the Consul referred to Washington for a decision, which has just been received.

Murphy says this action is the result of a request by the British Government, which did not even want America to grant a passport that they could have refused to visé.

"This refusal," adds Murphy, "indicates that a state of war exists between England and Ireland and that England recognizes it and fears a repetition of the scandal created by the Walsh-Dunne report."

THE ADVENTURES OF A NOVEL [FOUR]

I gave a copy of "The Choice" to the President of the Bank, and he came to see me a few days later for the first time. After the usual good-mornings he said

"I want to tell you about that book you gave me, 'The Choice.' I don't often read novels, but I certainly was interested in 'The Choice.' When I had finished I left it on the library table, and a few days later Mrs. — told me how much she had enjoyed reading it. This morning my niece from California, who is visiting us, looked very tired at breakfast. 'Out late?' I asked. 'Not at all,' she answered, 'but I picked up that book, "The Choice," after getting into bed, and I couldn't put it down till I reached the end.' I thought you'd like to know."

In the beginning I said "The Choice" was an "everyday novel," and now I will add—"for everybody."

NEW YORK POSTS OF LEGION TO MEET

First Annual State Convention of Veterans Will Be Held at Rochester on Oct. 10.

400 DELEGATES EXPECTED

They Will Represent More Than 500,000 Men Who Served During World War.

The first annual convention of the New York State branch of the American Legion, the organization of the men who fought in the war against the Central Powers, will be held in Rochester on Oct. 10 and 11. The above announcement was made yesterday by Ogden L. Mills, New York State Chairman of the Legion.

The convention will be the first official meeting of delegates representing more than 500,000 New Yorkers who served in the war, and the number of State and national questions, which will be taken up during the two days' session of the convention makes the gathering of more than passing interest. There are now 200 posts of veterans of the war in this State, and the number of official delegates will be about 400. In addition there will be hundreds of others present in an unofficial capacity.

Among the speakers who will address the convention are Governor Smith, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Senator James W. Wadsworth. There will be nothing in the convention to indicate the military rank held during the war, by the various delegates. By the rules of the organization military titles cannot be used, neither will any of the delegates appear in uniform. Each county in the State is entitled to four delegates, and an additional delegate, and one additional alternate for each 1,000 paid up memberships. These delegates will be elected at county conventions, which will be held in the latter part of September.

The American Legion also made public yesterday the roster of the 200 State camps organized, to date, in this State. Of these camps the following are in New York City, Long Island, and Westchester County:

There are now in the United States more than 2,500 American Legion posts, and the number is steadily increasing, over 1,100 applications for charters now being under consideration by the national committees. During September a drive for additional members in each State will be conducted, the goal being 1,000,000 new members.

The National Convention will be held in November at Minneapolis, and on Nov. 11, the anniversary of the armistice, Marshal Foch, the allied Commander in Chief, is expected to be the guest of the convention.

QUICK BURGLARY ARREST.

Patrolman Captures Alleged Loot Car and Five Men in Half an Hour.

Thirty minutes after the haberdashery store of Isadore Davis, at 595 Broadway, Brooklyn, was entered and silks and ties valued at $1,500 stolen, Patrolman Stanley Hnida arrested five men charged with the burglary in a restaurant on East Houston Street. The prisoners are Jacob Schiller, 20 years old, of 26 Suffolk Street; Joseph Goldstein, 20 years old, of 114 Ludlow Street; Maeyer Rosendorf, 21 years old, of 75 Forsyth Street, Jacob Saznowsky, 22 years old, of 85 Stanton Street, and Benjamin Schiff, 36 years old, of 146 East Houston Street.

Hnida was at the police signal box across the street from the restaurant at 9 o'clock yesterday morning receiving a general alarm that had been sent out for a maroon seven passenger touring car and its six passengers wanted for the burglary of the Brooklyn store committed a half hour before. At that moment he saw what he thought was a car answering that description pull up at the restaurant and five men alight. He asked the desk Lieutenant for assistance in making the arrest, and when Patrolman Florent Haerler arrived they took the five men in custody.

On being questioned by the police, the Prisoner Rosendorf told them that part of the loot could be found at a flat at 168 Ridge Street, said to be occupied by Sam Kaplan, 22 years old, a cap maker. The patrolmen say they found two bags of ties in Kaplan's apartment.

Kaplan was also arrested, and with the other five locked up at police headquarters.

CALL FOR RADIO OPERATORS

Shortage in the Merchant Marine Caused by Navy Demobilization.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Demobilization of the navy and withdrawal of navy radio operators from Shipping Board vessels has brought about a shortage of wireless telegraphers in the merchant marine service so stringent that the shipping board has issued a call for such men at $100 and $125 monthly in addition to all expenses.

Men qualifying are asked to apply to the nearest sea service bureau or to the board direct. Men employed as radio operators during the war need only to pass the Department of Commerce examination to obtain a commercial license.

GIRL KILLED BY AUTO.

Daughter of Professor W. J. White Struck by Slow-Moving Car.

Special to The New York Times.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Aug. 10.—Stepping in front of an automobile as she was crossing the street at Davenport, N. Y., Marion, the daughter of Professor and Mrs. Winton J. White of Bonita, N. J., was instantly killed. It was found that her skull was crushed and neck broken.

The machine was being driven slowly at the time and no arrests were made.

FIVE KILLED WHEN TRAIN STRIKES AUTO

Atlantic City Express Crashes Into Machine Carrying Family Party at Stratford, N. J.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Aug. 10.—Five persons were killed shortly before noon today when an Atlantic City express train on the Reading Railway crashed into their automobile in Stratford, N. J., about five miles from Camden. The dead are:

Simon Friedman, 35 years old, of Philadelphia; Morris Seltzer, 35 years old, of Stratford, N. J.; Thelma Seltzer, 3 years old, of Stratford, N. J.; Sarah Friedman, 7 years old, of Stratford, N. J., and Vincent Burkhardt, 8 years old, of Stratford, N. J.

With the exception of Thelma Seltzer, daughter of Morris Seltzer, all the occupants of the auto were killed instantly. The little girl was picked up unconscious near the tracks and died on the way to Cooper Hospital, Camden.

The automobile was owned by Charles Seltzer. Friedman, who was Seltzer's father-in-law; Sarah, niece of Friedman; Thelma, Seltzer's daughter, and Vincent Burkhardt, a neighbor's child, were accompanying Seltzer on a pleasure trip.

The machine had been driven but a short distance from the Friedman home, on Princeton Avenue, Stratford, when Seltzer stopped to permit a trolley car to pass. The motorman signalled him to go ahead, and Friedman crossed the tracks.

It is believed the trolley diverted his attention from the approaching express train on the railroad tracks, only a few yards distant from the trolley line. He drove slowly up the track, and the shore-bound express, running at terrific speed, struck the machine.

DIVERS SEEK TREASURE FROM SPANISH ARMADA

Old Vessel on Scottish Coast Yields Interesting Relics of Great Naval Battle of 1588.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOBERMORY, Scotland, Aug. 6.—Active operations in search of hidden treasure are going on in Tobermory, where a Sykes digger is cutting through the boulder clay and sand over a Spanish Armada galleon which was sunk in 1588. The feature of the operations is an effective hose, which is working at a pressure of about 100 pounds to the square inch. It cuts up and clears away the clay and mud between the trenches cut by the digger in the tumulus containing the old galleon, revealing any solid material, which is immediately raised under care of a diver.

Already quite a number of relics have been recovered, including a silver peso. It was the finding of a gold doubloon on the fluke of the ship's anchor that started this search for treasure in 1803.

The crew of the diving ship often wonder how they are getting so many rounded stones of three and four inches in diameter in the boulder clay, but extracts from Spanish State papers in the Castle of Simancas explain the frequency with which these are found, as well as a quantity of lead sheathing:

"General orders for the Armada by Duke of Medina-Sidonia May 1, 1588, page 293: Every ship will carry on board loads of casting stones to be used during the fight. These stones are to be divided between the deck, the poop, and fighting tops."

Another order given on the same page runs as follows:

"Artificial fire must be intrusted to the care of the most skilled men who understand how to manage it. Otherwise the result may be of great damage to ourselves."

This accounts for so much lead and copper sheathing being found in the course of the search. To protect themselves the big Spanish galleons used sheet lead and copper to sheathe the wooden decks against the use of this artificial fire on the part of the English.

Among the other relics brought up during the last ten weeks are calcareous accretions showing rusted muskets, daggers, swords, and axes, lead piping, pewter, and quantities of black African oak much perforated by worms.

It is hoped the galleon will be raised and reconstructed.

OLD N. C. O.'S MOURN 'BARS.'

Lieutenant Colonels and Majors Drop Rank—Verse Shows Regret.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Aug. 1.—In these days when the breaking up of the American Army of Occupation brings many partings of fighting men, one hears a dignified officer say often to other dignified officers, "Well, good-bye, fellows, I'm going back home to be a Sergeant." This means the speaker was one of the thousands of N. C. O.s who gained commissions and did so well they rose to high rank.

There are Lieutenant Colonels and Majors galore in the A. E. F. who were Sergeants before the United States got into the war, and who, when they get home, lose their temporary rank.

As an instance, I mention Lieut. Col. Haverfield, Adjutant of the Army of Occupation. He is a regular Sergeant. Then there's Major Cockriel, the Provost Marshal, who made good as Chief of Police of Coblenz. There's Major J. Leland Bass, who was Admiral of the fleet the Americans maintained on the Rhine. There are scores of others who lose the glory of the silver or gold leaf.

Stating their case, Captain Madden has written a string of verse, I quote here:

(Dedicated to the army Sergeants who were made Second Lieutenants during the war.)

They took me out of the ranks I loved,
And they gave me a golden bar,
I, who had sailed the seven seas,
From Maine out to Zanatbar;
My education was none too good,
I had never worn evening dress,
And of balls and teas in society,
I knew nothing, I confess.

It lifted me up on a higher plane
Than I'd ever known before,
For I knew what a commission meant
In the days before the war;
I was awfully proud when they gave it to me,
And I wrote a letter that night
Back home to a girl I used to know,
And somehow the world seemed bright.

Then came a night that was black as sin,
And the blinding, cold rain fell,
We were holding a line just east of the Meuse,
Not far from old Cunel;
The zero hour was 4 o'clock,
And our chances of life were slim,
But I thought of the words her letter brought,
"I'm awfully proud of you, Jim."

They sent me back, and for two long months
I lay in a dreamy ward;
When I returned to the colors again,
The Huns had sheathed the sword;
For the war had ceased, and peace had come,
And now they are through with me,
I'll be wearing the chevrons again,
Just as I used to be.

WAR HEROINES BACK FROM WORK ABROAD

Many Prominent New York Women Active in Y. M. C. A. Efforts Return.

TWO BIG VESSELS DOCK

The Orduna Brings W. Somerset Maugham, English Playwright—78 Brides on the Imperator.

After having been tied up at Liverpool for several weeks as the results of a series of strikes called by various marine labor organizations, the Cunard line steamer Orduna docked here yesterday with 400 first-class and fifty-five second-class passengers. The transport Imperator also arrived yesterday with 3,485 military and civilian passengers.

Among those who came on the Orduna was W. Somerset Maugham, the English playwright, whose play, "Too Many Husbands," is now in course of production in New York. He said he was en route to China on a pleasure trip and did not believe he could remain over for the premier of his new play. The playwright had not heard of the actors' strike until he stepped ashore and he expressed great interest in the situation which has arisen between the managers and the players.

"All that I can say offhand is that the actors should get a living wage," Mr. Maugham said when asked for an opinion. "If they are not getting that, then they have a right to make forceful demands for it."

The playwright, with a laugh, added that playwrights might have to make a demand for a living wage.

Women Saw War Service.

Mrs. Wallace Cumnock and Miss Jean H. White, both of Evanston, Ill., returned on the liner from relief work in France. Miss White, who had been overseas for a year and a day when she left for the United States, said she had been identified with the activities of the American Committee for French Wounded, which, she added, was the oldest relief organization founded here. The committee, in the war, began its work with the French in August, 1914, and has been continuing its functions ever since. Miss White said she had seen service in every area of the war zone and was glad to get home for rest. She said that the work of the American Committee for French Wounded would be perpetuated in a memorial hospital to be erected at Rheims from funds to be raised here. The institution, which will be known as the Rheims Memorial Hospital, would be turned over to the French Government when completed. Mrs. Cumnock said she had been doing relief work in various parts of France.

Colonel Richard Dowse, chief administrative officer of the Australian General Staff in France, was also a passenger. He said he had come here to see Mrs. Dowse, who had been living in the United States since he went to France in 1916. Major W. S. Ross and Lieutenant G. G. Swann, two fellow Australians, arrived on their way home to be demobilized. William Parker Butler, a cousin of Sir Alfred Booth, Chairman of the Cunard Steamship Company, returned from a business trip abroad. Mr. Butler, who is an American, lives in this city.

Miss Blossom Churan, who has been studying music in England and France preparatory to entrance on the operatic stage, caused amusement among the customs officials when she explained the reason for bringing a large doll dressed as a Scottish Highlander.

"It's a bit of Scotch, you see," she explained, "and I understand it's very welcome in the United States these days."

One bystander expressed the opinion that there might be some truth in her remark, as the sawdust-stuffed Highlander was large enough to contain a bottle of the real article in its interior.

Impressive funeral services were held on Saturday en route from Halifax for William Gundey, one of the Orduna's stewards, who is well known to ocean travelers, having been on some of the larger steamers of the Cunard fleet in the days before the war. Gundey met his death the day before the steamer arrived in Halifax when he fell down an elevator shaft and was killed. Captain Taylor, commander of the Orduna, officiated at the services, which were witnessed by the passengers.

The liner brought 1,694 bags of first-class mail and 300 bags of parcel post. Much of the latter has been delayed at Liverpool for some time due to the strikes which held up the sailing of the Orduna.

"Y" Workers Return on Imperator.

On board the Imperator were many prominent New York women who have been doing war work abroad under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Seventy-eight brides, twenty of whom were married to officers, were also on the steamship. Many athletes who competed in the recent Inter-Allied games held in the Pershing Stadium near Paris were part of the homecomers.

Among the "Y" workers was Miss Elizabeth Walker of Detroit, Mich., winner of the Lorraine Medal offered for an essay on the future of the Y. M. C. A. Miss Walker said that the chief point made in her essay was that the organization should establish a series of "Y" huts similar to those seen in the camps both here and abroad, to replace the saloon as a congregating place for men.

Miss Cornelia Cott Davis of 109 East 50th Street, Manhattan, was decorated by Marshal Petain for her bravery in administering to the wounded Marines who were repelling the German offensive on Paris. A few of the Marines, who were attached to the 2d Division, were on the Imperator as fellow passengers. Miss Janet Jeffery of Dorchester, Mass., also a "Y" worker, wore the Distinguished Service Cross, which was bestowed on her for attending to the sufferings of the patients of an army hospital near the front lines which had been bombed by the Germans. Miss Jeffery was herself wounded and was obliged to spend four months in the hospital recovering her health.

Elizabeth D. and Sally W. Simonton, known to thousands of doughboys as "those Simonton twins," brought back with them two citations from American commanders. They made their home in a Ford camionette, taking their rolling canteen beyond the scope of the "Y" huts. Others from this city among the 236 "Y" workers who returned on the Imperator were:

Miss Marie Douglas Sloane Horner, 17 West Tenth Street; Mrs. Helena Smith Dayton, 213 East Eighteenth Street; Miss Frances W. Parrows, 137 East Seventy-first Street; Miss Jennie D. Wells, 70 Morningside Drive; Miss Ella Valk, 337 East Sixty-sixth Street; Miss Marjorie Morrison, Carnegie Hall; Miss Ann Edgar Donald, 6 East Ninety-second Street; Miss Ruth Garland, 557 West End Avenue; Miss Janet Jackson, 50 West Sixty-first Street; Miss Irene Simmons, 607 West Forty-fifth Street; Miss Phyllis Currington, 216 West Sixty-fifth Street; Miss Florence Deering, 602 West 136th Street; Miss Lydia C. Donnovy, 214 West Forty-seventh Street; Miss Elizabeth Grimball, 320 Central Park West; Miss C. B. Clagett, 47 East Fifty-eighth Street; Miss Marie Torrence, 214 Riverside Drive; Miss Janet P. Hall, 62 West Fifty-second Street; Miss Eleanor Janvier, 60 West Tenth Street; Miss Marion Hall, 124 East Sixty-first Street; Miss Hazel Woodbull, 244 Waverly Place; Mrs. Matilda Orr, 124 East Thirty-second Street; Miss Marguerite Clark, 476 Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn, and Miss Elizabeth Guilford, Teacher's College.

Officers Back from France.

Commander J. L. Cullen of Albany returned from Paris, where he was a member of the Aviation Commission at the Peace Conference. During the war he was detailed for duty in Italy and was decorated by the King for distinguished service.

Brig. Gen. John J. Bradley, attached during the war to the American headquarters at Chaumont, who had charge of the investigation of the conduct and deportment of welfare workers in the A. E. F., returned on the transport. He declined to discuss how many welfare workers he had detected in wrongdoing. Lieut. Col. Joseph D. McKenny, a fellow passenger, said that when he had left Antwerp, Belgium, in the latter part of July, efforts were being made to salvage the German steamers interned in the harbor which had been sunk by their crews. Most of the boats could be eventually saved, he said.

Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, retired, was at the pier to meet his son, Colonel Sherman Miles, attached to General Pershing's headquarters, who came home as a casual officer.

The athletes returned as members of a casual company in command of Colonel Joseph H. Thompson, who during the war was Athletic Officer with the Second Army. Thirty-nine of the athletes were down on the passenger lists as civilians. Colonel Thompson explained that this was due to a ruling of the contest committee that any allied soldier or officer could take part in the games who had been in the service after Aug. 4, 1914. Many Americans who had been mustered out of the service returned to France under this ruling to enter the contests, the officer said.

Captain Wilfred H. Maloney of the Poodle Commission, and coach at Stanford University, returned with the athletic contingent. The civilians were allowed to go ashore immediately, while the medal winners who are still in the service were held for demobilization.

Fifty general prisoners, among them a former lieutenant, charged with cowardice, were brought over on the Imperator. One hundred and fifty-six dogs, mascots of military units returning on the steamer, occupied special quarters on the boat deck aft. There was one casualty among the pets on the way over, but Bessie, a French dog belonging to an infantry unit, made up for the deficiency by giving birth to six pups.

PHYSICIANS SEEK JOBS.

Medical Men, Recently in War Service, Apply to Re-employment Bureau

William Fellowes Morgan, Chairman of the Re-employment Committee, announced yesterday that as a result of contributions received the Re-employment Bureau for Soldiers, Sailors and Marines would be able to continue its work for three weeks. Funds are still needed to keep the bureau running until Nov. 1, when it is hoped most of the former service men will have been placed, Mr. Morgan said.

Twenty-five physicians are seeking employment through the bureau, according to F. A. Giffin, Chief of the Division of Executives, Professional and Technical Men. Many of these men, whose practice has been ruined while they were in the service, cannot afford at this time to start anew, Mr. Giffin said. One physician listed, who held the rank of Captain in the army, would like to have a place on a steamer running to South American ports or to Europe, while another applicant seeks to be superintendent of a tuberculosis sanitarium. Another doctor wants to become identified with an organization which is establishing a medical department.

Major Warren Biglow, director of the bureau, announced yesterday that he had places awaiting 22 first-class machinists, 19 diemakers, 17 toolmakers, 50 carpenters, and as many bricklayers, 37 power pressmen, 23 polishers, and 5 marine engineers. The carpenters and bricklayers must be union men, he announced, while the marine engineers must be licensed.

HELD ON BURGLARY CHARGE

Two Armed Soldiers Arrested by Police in Brooklyn Home.

Two soldiers attached to the 21st Recruit Company at Fort Slocum were arraigned in the Flatbush court yesterday and held without bail for a hearing on Tuesday on a short affidavit charging them with burglary. The men are Corporal George Schotoff, 21 years old, and Charles Feindt, a private, who stated his family lived at 1,605 New York Avenue. According to the police, each of the men, who were in uniform, had in their possession a loaded revolver and two chisels.

The soldiers were arrested early in the morning by Patrolmen Charles East and Dennis O'Sullivan, at the home of Charles Richardson, 3,312 Glenwood Road. Richardson is a captain of the police reserves, attached to the Manhattan headquarters. He and his family are away on a vacation. According to the police the soldiers had jimmied their way through three doors, two of which they relocked after their entrance.

The police were forced to break the doors down and say they found the soldiers hiding in a closet in the children's playroom. The men gave battle to the police, using their chisels on the patrolmen, and O'Sullivan was badly cut on the hand.

Schotoff has been in the service three years and recently re-enlisted.

PLANS FOR LAFAYETTE DAY.

National Committee Expects Great Nation-Wide Celebration.

The Lafayette Day National Committee announced yesterday the progress of plans for the country-wide celebration of the birthday of Lafayette on Sept. 6. Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels in a letter to the committee said:

"I have just received a letter from the Hon. T. W. Bickette, Governor of North Carolina, with reference to the suggestion about Lafayette Day. In my letter to him I suggested that he take steps toward having a great Lafayette Day at Fayetteville, N. C. The town was named for Lafayette and was at that time the largest in the State. The Governor in his reply says: 'I shall be more than glad to make a proclamation setting apart Sept. 6 as Lafayette Day, and will take the matter up with the people of Fayetteville, suggesting that the celebration be held in that city. I think this is a fine idea.'"

Announcement was also made yesterday by the committee that responses from every part of the country were being received in answer to the call for national observance.

Couple Arrested in Theatre.

When Samuel Perlmutter and his wife, Esther, of 1,412 Madison Avenue, were arraigned before Magistrate Harris in the Essex Market Court on a charge of disorderly conduct made by Albert Gutterman, manager of Loew's Delancey Theatre, the complainant produced an affidavit in which he charged, among other things, that Mrs. Perlmutter broke the rules of the Fire Department by sitting on her husband's lap during the performance on Saturday night. The court adjourned the hearing on reading this charge until Wednesday morning. Gutterman complained that in addition to sitting on her husband's lap Mrs. Perlmutter created a further disturbance "by talking in a loud and boisterous manner."

Lejeune Praises American Women.

Major Gen. John A. Lejeune, commander of the 2d Division, expressed his gratitude for the part the women of America had played in the war at an entertainment and dance given in his honor at the Bayside Yacht Club Saturday evening. He said: "It was the splendid courage and spirit of the women of the United States that kept up the morale of the American Army in France. The wives, mothers, and sweethearts had as much to do with winning the war as the soldiers."

ANALYZES RECORDS OF ASSEMBLYMEN

Citizens Union Committee Issues Verdict on Manhattan and Bronx Legislators.

PRAISES SMITH AND HYLAN

Says Governor and Mayor Have Vetoed Much Objectionable Legislation.

The Citizens Union Committee on Legislation yesterday made public summaries of the personal records of the State Assemblymen for Manhattan and the Bronx for the session of 1919. Commenting on the work of the city legislators, the report of the committee, which soon will be published, says in regard to the part played by the Governor and the Mayor:

"It is getting to be a fixed habit with the Legislature to 'pass the buck' on certain types of city bills to the Mayor and Governor. Every year it is necessary for these executives to exercise their veto powers to protect the city against the city's own representatives in the Legislature.

"Time and again the Legislature passed measures which members must have known would meet with veto. This procedure cannot be too emphatically denounced. They acted as they did either for the purpose of shirking the responsibility which they should have assumed, or with the intent, often openly avowed, of 'putting' the Mayor or Governor 'into a hole.' Either way their action was reprehensible and cannot be defended on any ground, partisan or otherwise.

"Thus, of seventy-four objectionable bills which the Citizens Union committee believed to be against the public interest, but which passed both Houses, the Mayor vetoed twenty-eight and the Governor eighteen. Most of the bills being city bills, the Mayor naturally had to bear the brunt of this sort of attack. That both Governor Smith and Mayor Hylan responded so well to the demands of the situation and were so quick to act in behalf of the city's best interests is to their great credit, and the Citizens Union is glad to accord this recognition of their public service.

"It is worth recording that the Governor himself directly exerted a good influence when, on one occasion, he appeared before his party conference and urged the members to put a stop to salary increase and grab bills. His own wide experience in legislation, together with his new executive responsibilities, thus combined to make him an active force working in behalf of the city's best interests."

As to the work of the session in general the report says:

"Despite the influence of the Governor and the efforts of the legislative leaders, log-rolling, trading, and dickering continued as usual. Carelessness and sloppiness were characteristic of the session. In his veto messages the Governor called attention of the members to this matter. Again and again bills slipped through one house or the other in such shape that they had to be recalled and repassed.

"There were many instances of the passage of a measure in two different forms, both the Senate and Assembly form of the bill being passed by both houses. Some of these cases may have been intentional, but probably the majority of them were due simply to carelessness. Bills were passed repealing sections of the law that had just been enacted. An increasing tendency was noted to pass private claim bills covering cases which had either already been considered and disallowed or where the remedy was ample under existing law."

The summaries of the personal records of the Assemblymen follow:

MANHATTAN.

CAESAR B. F. BARRA, (Dem.,) Second District.—Services of value in Codes Committee; otherwise continued inconspicuous. Record of votes poor.

MAURICE BLOCH, (Dem.,) Sixteenth District.—Showed improvement in record of votes in assembly and in committee; still short of real service.

B. ELLIOTT BURSTON, (Dem.,) Twenty-third District.—New member with colorless record; most of his city bills lacking in merit; has failed to grasp possibilities of real service. Record of votes fair.

AUGUST CLAESSENS, (Soc.,) Seventeenth District.—Adroit and clever exponent of socialistic point of view; emphatic but seldom effective in debate. His record of votes on city measures continued excellent.

JOHN J. CRONIN, (Dem.,) Thirteenth District.—New member, earnest and conscientious, but little in his record to indicate promise.

SAMUEL DICKSTEIN, (Dem.,) Fourth District.—New member, attentive but with colorless record. Poor record of votes.

CHARLES D. DONOHUE, (Dem.,) Fifth District.—In second year as minority floor leader, showed increased capacity in debate and firmer grasp of legislation. Deserves credit for restraining tendency of colleagues to put through mandatory payroll bills.

MARK GOLDBERG, (Dem.,) Fourteenth District.—Although his record showed some improvement, it still falls short of the record expected of any member with thirteen years' experience. Record of votes in committee good; in Assembly fair.

PETER J. HAMILL, (Dem.,) First District.—Active for his own legislation; otherwise not of much value. Record shows no independence. Frequently unrecorded.

JOHN C. HAWKINS, (Rep.,) Twenty-first District.—Inconspicuous; fair record of votes.

MARTIN J. HEALY, (Dem.,) Nineteenth District.—In first term, showed some promise. Record of votes above average; indicated independence.

LEO A. KAHN, (Dem.,) Eleventh District.—New member; gave no promise of future usefulness. Very bad record of votes.

OWEN M. KIERNAN, (Dem.,) Eighteenth District.—In seventh term; continued hopelessly ineffective. Bad record of votes.

Mrs. MARY M. LILLY, (Dem.,) Seventh District.—New member; attentive to duties, and of some ability. Very poor record of votes.

MARTIN G. McCUE, (Dem.,) Twelfth District.—Able and active; entertaining, if not always effective speaker. His viewpoint still unstated.

PETER P. McELLIGOTT, (Dem.,) Third District.—Member of long experience; record shows slight improvement over past years.

WILLIAM W. PELLET, (Rep.,) Tenth District.—The ablest new member in the New York City delegation; excellent record of votes and other activities; promises well for the future.

EARL A. SMITH, (Dem.,) Twenty-second District.—In his third term; showed increased value as a legislator. Record of votes good. Particularly commended for his work in behalf of bill to open the Harlem Speedway to public.

JOSEPH STEINBERG, (Rep.,) Fifteenth District.—Energetic and active legislator; excellent record of votes.

SOL ULLMAN, (Rep.,) Sixth District.—New member; attentive, but not commensurately effective; record of votes below the average.

PHILIP A. WALTER, (Dem.,) Ninth District.—New member; good record of votes; gave promise of usefulness.

HERMAN WEISS, (Rep.,) Eighth District.—New member; not particularly active; record of votes unsatisfactory; not effective.

CHARLES A. WINTER, (Dem.,) Twentieth District.—In second term; failed to develop value as legislator; record of votes poor.

THE BRONX.

WILLIAM S. EVANS, (Dem.,) Fifth District.—Inactive; good record of votes.

M. MALDWIN FERTIG, (Dem.,) Fourth District.—After year's absence, continued former excellent record; one of the city's most useful legislators; good record of votes.

EDWARD J. FLYNN, (Dem.,) Second District.—Not particularly attentive or effective as legislator; absent on important roll calls; unsatisfactory record of votes.

THOMAS J. McDONALD, (Dem.,) Sixth District.—Sincere legislator; not particularly effective; record of votes fair.

JOSEPH V. McKEE, (Dem.,) Seventh District.—Conscientious and attentive legislator; record of votes fair.

J. FAIRFAX McLAUGHLIN, (Dem.,) Eighth District.—Record of votes unsatisfactory; introduced many bills lacking in merit or objectionable.

EARL H. MILLER, (Dem.,) First District.—Experienced legislator; good record in past, which he did not quite equal this year; fair record of votes.

ROBERT S. MULLEN, (Dem.,) Third District.—Intelligent and energetic new member of promise; good record of votes.

PRINCETON'S TIGERS CAGED FOR A WHILE

Great Bronze Figures Crated and Sandbagged While Nassau Hall Is Being Remodeled.

MEMORIAL TO SOLDIER DEAD

Gilded Names on White Marble Walls and a Scholarship for Each Princeton Sacrifice.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 11.—As a result of the beginning of construction work on the War Memorial the famous Princeton tigers have this week been caged for the Summer. The great bronze statues that flanked the broad steps of Nassau Hall have been covered with sand bags and crated so that they may suffer no harm as the work of altering Nassau Hall is being carried on.

The alterations are to provide a fitting memorial to the 137 Princeton men who lost their lives in the war, and are one of the first steps in the program of the Endowment Committee that is raising $14,000,000 for the university.

Nassau Hall, in which Washington received the thanks of the American people and where the Continental Congress met at the close of the Revolution, has always been the centre of Princeton college life. It is for this reason that it has been chosen to enshrine the memory of Princeton's dead and it is doubtful whether the trustees and alumni would have dared to suggest alterations for any but this high purpose.

The changes were made necessary and accepted by all alumni because there is at present no single room in the building large enough to serve the purpose of the required memorial. For this reason, the partitions immediately behind the iron doors are being removed to make a large high room about thirty-six feet square, which will be finished in panels of white marble in which the names of Princeton men who have fallen in the recent war and other wars of the United States will be engraved in gold letters.

In addition to the Memorial Hall proper, the committee plans an individual memorial scholarship to each one of Princeton's fallen sons, and bearing his name. Each scholarship will have behind it a fund ranging from five to ten thousand dollars, the income of which will be used to make it possible for some deserving young man, who might otherwise have not been able to obtain a college education, to come to Princeton and perpetuate the memory and the spirit of sacrifice and service which actuated the student or alumnus thus commemorated.

"We believe that our Princeton boys who gave their lives would prefer to have their memories thus perpetuated in the spirit and to feel that their sacrifice was in a sense the means of assisting another, perhaps less fortunately situated, young man," said Mr. Henry B. Thompson, Chairman of the Endowment Committee. "The construction of the Memorial Hall and the founding of these scholarships marks the first step toward carrying out the program of the Endowment Committee. We have no hesitation in carrying into immediate execution this part of our program.

"Funds for twelve of these scholarships have already been placed at the disposal of the university by the classmates, friends, and relatives. Indeed I am confident that we can carry through not only this, but every item in our program. Fourteen million seems a very large sum, but we are able to explain what every penny is needed for, and we believe that Princeton men and our friends will understand the necessity of our campaign.

"Nobody has suffered more from the war than endowed colleges like Harvard, Yale and Princeton. The decline in the purchasing power of money means in effect that such endowments as existed, and for the most part they were inadequate, have been just about cut in half. The burden, of course, falls upon those who can least afford it, and who have been of greatest service to education, the faculty, and we cannot allow this situation to continue. Their salaries have likewise been cut in half.

"Wage earners in many lands are today receiving more than the salaries paid to university teachers. It may take us some time to get the full fourteen million, but the six million which we need for our faculty will, I believe, be forthcoming in a relatively short time."

TO BULLETIN AIR FLIGHT.

Messages from Pathfinder Unit to be Flashed to Times Tower.

When the All America Pathfinder aerial unit of the War Department leaves Hazelhurst Field at Mineola, L. I., on Wednesday on its transcontinental journey, which will terminate in San Francisco, Cal., and which will serve the double purpose of recruiting for all branches of the army as well as of showing the American public what an aerial squadron in operation is like, word will be flashed to this city by wireless telephone from one of the airplanes of the progress the aerial unit is making.

Arrangements have been effected whereby the unit will send its messages to the Adams Aerial Transportation Company, which has arranged to have a telephonic receiving set and the other necessary equipment installed in its offices in the Times Building at Forty-second Street and Broadway, and the aerials are to be strung from the loftiest point of the Times Building. These reports from the flying aviators will be received by aviation enthusiasts and the press.

A thorough demonstration of the operation of the new aerial wireless system that is to be used was given to Roger J. Adams, President of the concern that is to co-operate with the flyers in the transmission of news, yesterday, and he, together with several others who were present, said that the service through the air from an airplane flying at an altitude of several thousands of feet and several miles away was much more distinct than the ordinary telephonic service.

STATE OFFICIALS KILLED.

Pennsylvania Game Commissioner's Automobile Hit by Train.

ERIE, Aug. 10.—Dr. Joseph M. Kalbfus, Game Commissioner of Pennsylvania and a resident of Harrisburg, and E. E. Kelly of Dubois were killed today when an automobile in which they were riding was struck by a Pennsylvania Railroad passenger train.

The accident occurred east of Tiona, near Sheffield. Mr. Kelly was Field Superintendent of the State Game Commission.

Commissioner Kalbfus and Mr. Kelly had been in Western Pennsylvania for several days inspecting land offered as game reserves west of the Alleghany Mountains. They spent Friday at Uniontown, Saturday at Dubois, and were en route to inspect a tract near Warren when the fatal accident occurred.

The accident occurred on a crossing which is obscured by embankments and brush.

One Million Five Hundred Thousand Pounds of Powder for the Feet.

That is what the government sent last year to make the soldiers' and sailors' feet comfortable and fit for the kind of war they fought and finished.

In Peace and War for over 25 years Allen's Foot-Ease, the Antiseptic Healing Powder for the Feet, to be shaken into the shoes and sprinkled in the foot-bath, has been the standard remedy for all aching, swollen, hot, tired feet, blisters and sore spots and for the instant relief of corns, bunions and callouses.

Thousands of people sent packages of Allen's Foot-Ease to their sons, brothers or sweethearts in the army and navy because they knew from experience that it would freshen and rest their feet, make their shoes comfortable and walking easy. Those who use Allen's Foot-Ease have solved their foot troubles.

VICTROLA

CHINA NOW A TOPIC FOR JAPAN'S EDITORS

Newspapers Are Concerned Over the Foreign Relations of the Nation.

DISCUSS AMERICAN VIEWS

Tokio Yomiuri Declares a Minority in Japan and Here Are the Trouble Makers.

A symposium culled from leading Japanese newspapers and made public here by the East and West News Bureau shows that writers in that country are devoting much attention to Japan's foreign relations and are writing with considerable frankness about the danger of "misunderstandings" over the Chinese question. The possibility of Europe and America concentrating more attention than formerly upon the Far East seems to be well recognized.

The Herald of Asia in a recent issue said:

"So long as Europe and America were busy with their own disputes they were content to leave the Orient alone; but now that the enemies of human liberty have been crushed and rendered impotent for years to come, temptation will arise to divert to East Asia the attention formerly given to Europe. Even before the war Western nations were taking an ever-increasing interest in China, and some of them regarded Japan as an obstacle to their progress there. Post-bellum conditions will only tend to render this propensity more acute. Intense rivalry in trade is alone sufficient to cause apprehension among nations so engaged. To this danger are added the poverty of China and her constant temptation to be enthralled financially by Western nations. Anything that tends to give foreign countries financial or territorial interest or concession in China must be interpreted as a menace to the safety of Japan.

"If America be for the Americans, and Canada for the Canadians, and Australia for the whites, then surely the Orient is for Orientals, and Japan cannot afford to rely wholly on the mercy or the assistance of Western powers. Japan is in the unenviable position of having to protect the interests of Western nations in the Orient and at the same time safeguard her own. Consequently the greatest work of the alliance in future will be to preserve the Monroe Doctrine in East Asia and to promote peace and friendship between China and Japan, and between the peoples of the Orient generally and the peoples of the West."

Sees Misunderstandings Grow.

The Tokio Yomiuri has the following:

"Why deny that misunderstandings exist between the United States and Japan, and that, to our regret, they are daily growing more serious? And our regret is doubled when it is seen that the misunderstandings emanate from mutual sympathy with China. Americans say, 'China has established a republic in place of the Ching dynasty and is now in the throes of revolution. This, it is said, displeases conservative Japan, who takes every occasion to bring pressure to bear upon the development of her neighbor. Japan's aim is to absorb China and reduce the 400 million Chinese to vassals. In the past, she has annexed Korea and the free disposal of Manchuria. And now she is trying to make Shantung another Manchuria. Such tyranny on the part of Japan should not be allowed to pass without challenge by America, who is pledged to the cause of justice.'

"Japanese retore, 'However eagerly the Americans may desire to develop China, their activity surely will be hampered by the powers' so-called spheres of influence. The neutralization of the Manchurian railways or the principle of the "open door" and equal opportunity proposed by former Secretary of State Knox, as well as the new banking consortium, is an effort on the part of the United States to destroy the established spheres of influence whereby to wedge herself in.' Considered from the American point of view, Japan's policy toward China pivots around the subjugation of China. Seen from the Japanese viewpoint, however, the American movements reveal an insatiable ambition hidden under the cloak of hypocrisy. There is no manner of doubt that both of those views are prejudiced. Just suppose, however, what would follow if these American and Japanese misunderstandings and prejudices were left to take their own course! It is needless to say that the inevitable outcome would be most regrettable. There are always heard some dissentient voices even among peoples supposed to understand each other perfectly.

Sees Minority Causing Trouble.

"We do not deny that there are some Japanese who may have territorial ambitions; neither can it be refuted that some Americans are actuated by selfish motives in China. But it is highly gratifying to note that those sections of the two nations, comparable to the Prussian junkerdom, constitute a negligible minority. It would be a calamity to America and Japan if this minority were allowed to drive them into misunderstandings, jealousies, animosities, and what not. If a defect in the defense line of a nation and a deficiency of raw materials mean designs on a neighbor, there could be no peace at all in the world. Is there any country on the face of the globe which constitutes a perfect defense line within its own borders? Again, is there any country absolutely self-contained, self-supplying, and self-sufficient in economic matters? The current age is characterized by free barter based on world economics through which one is able to make up one's deficiency from another's surplus. The country that will derive the greatest benefits from China's political and economic development is Japan, next to China herself. The more railway facilities are improved, and the more prosperous the mining, cotton and sheep industries grow in China, the more benefits will Japan receive. Accordingly, what Japan desires of China, from the bottom of her heart, is the establishment of peace and the development of industry in China at the earliest possible opportunity. It is nailed down as an anachronistic idea to think it possible to make China another Korea, or that it is in the interests of Japan to do so. This is briefly the Japanese view of China."

While believing that it will tally with the American view, the Yomiuri cannot help regretting that misunderstandings should occur between the two nations on trivial occasions, leading, as they often do, to estrangement.

"Although anti-Japanese activities in China have subsided, similar agitation has appeared in Singapore, and in other foreign localities where Chinese are resident," writes the editor of the Kokumin. "The anti-Japanese movement is a sort of intermittent fever with the Chinese, and it will not subside until after a certain period has elapsed."

CONDEMN STRANDED SHIP.

Nova Scotian Tide Ebbs and Flows Through North Star.

Special to The New York Times.

YARMOUTH, N. S., Aug. 10.—The steamer North Star, Captain Strout, which went ashore during a dense fog on Friday morning on Green Island, eight miles from here, has been condemned.

The survey on Saturday found that the ship's bottom from the bow to aft of the engine room is badly crushed in. The engines were displaced and the boilers badly started. The tide ebbs and flows through her. Steamers and tugs are stripping the ship of all movable furnishings.

AUTO CHASE AFTER BANDITS

Four Shots Fired by Policemen Who Caught Men on Sixth Avenue.

After a spirited automobile chase of ten blocks, during which four shots were fired by the pursuing patrolman, two of four men, who are alleged to have entered the establishment of Morris Kanter, at 31 East Twenty-seventh Street, and taken several thousand dollars' worth of silks, were overhauled yesterday afternoon in the motor truck in which they were endeavoring to escape, and locked up in the West Twentieth Street station, charged with burglary.

The prisoners, who were taken into custody by Patrolman Joseph Anderson, at the corner of Fourteenth Street and Sixth Avenue, described themselves at Morris Mackover, 23 years old, of 110 Ludlow Street, and Henry Mitowsky, 21 years old, of 148 Marcy Avenue, Brooklyn. Their two companions, the police say, jumped from the motor truck and escaped. Mackover, according to the police, was the driver of the truck.

Patrolman Anderson was riding on a Twenty-third Street crosstown car when the engineer of the Kanter store, George Gesllorenzo, called to him to jump off and pursue the automobile truck which was speeding west in front of the trolley at high speed. Patrolman Anderson jumped aboard an automobile standing near by and told the driver to put on full speed. The chase continued down Sixth Avenue, the policeman firing four shots after the motor truck. At Fourteenth Street Patrolman Anderson caught up with the truck, which he boarded, pointing his revolver at the driver. Two of the men jumped and escaped. At the police station Gesllorenzo, the engineer, said he had found four men in the act of taking the silk. One of them covered the engineer with his revolver and said: "I'll blow your head off if you try to make any trouble, but if you keep your mouth shut we will send you a nice check tomorrow." The engineer was held upstairs by this man while the other three loaded the silk into the truck.

FERRYBOAT IN CRASH.

Passengers Have Scare When Railroad Float Hits The Bronx.

Hundreds of passengers on the upper deck of the municipal ferryboat Bronx were frightened when the starboard side of the boat was struck by an empty train float 500 feet from the Battery Park wall.

The Bronx had just left its slip on the Manhattan side, and was headed for St. George, S. I., when the collision happened. Fifteen feet of the upper deck railing and two iron stanchions were torn from their fastenings. No passengers were injured.

The ferryboat was making good speed, with a strong outgoing tide, when the railroad float, in tow of a tug, came down the North River. There was a misunderstanding of signals, and before the courses of the craft could be changed they came together with a crash. The Bronx backed off, and the railroad float continued on its way without identifying itself. After the trip the ferryboat was ordered out of service until repairs are made.

Patrolman John Brennecki of the Charles Street station was on the upper deck. He saw the collision was inevitable and shouted a warning to the passengers on that side of the upper deck, who hurried away from danger. The Captain of the tugboat swung sharply to starboard, and swerved the railroad float so that it struck a glancing blow.

Two men on the upper deck, thinking the ferryboat was sinking, leaped from the Bronx to the railroad float, and were carried off on it. Many passengers seized life preservers.

WANT WILSON AGAIN.

Leading Choice Among Indiana Democrats for 1920 Nomination.

Special to The New York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 10.—A canvass by The Indianapolis Star of the thirteen Indiana Congress districts in which Democratic County Chairmen, State Senators, postmasters, prominent lawyers, and leaders were interviewed, shows that interest as to the choice for the Presidential nominee in 1920 is running high, and that opinion is divided as to the best man to head the national ticket.

The canvass shows that President Wilson has the lead. His supporters say that his record at Washington and in the world war is such that he is the greatest President that the United States has ever known, and that he should be renominated.

Next to President Wilson, William G. McAdoo is the choice. His supporters laud him for executive ability displayed in war financial problems and for his administration of the railroads. Vice President Thomas R. Marshall, a favorite son of Indiana, is the third choice. His statesmanship is said to measure up to that of any person mentioned as a candidate. Governor Cox of Ohio is the fourth selection.

Out of 93 replies 26 favored President Wilson, 21 Mr. McAdoo, and 19 Vice President Marshall.

MANY SOCIALIST PROTESTS.

Internationalists Oppose Blockade of Russia and Holding Prisoners.

LUCERNE, Aug. 10. (Associated Press.)—The Socialist Conference today adopted resolutions against intervention in Russia, against maintenance of a blockade against Russia, and protesting against the retention of about a million prisoners "in a form of slavery."

Resolutions favoring the taking of measures by the Allies against massacres in Armenia, the withdrawal of German troops from Lithuania and Letvia, and recognition of the Republic of Letvia as an independent state were adopted.

Still other resolutions protested against the attitude of the Rumanians in Bessarabia, recommended the formation of a Balkanic federation with autonomy for its members, protested against the policy being followed in Asia Minor and the occupation of Smyrna by Greek troops, supported Korea's demands for recognition as an independent State, and demanded freedom of speech and of meeting for India.

BILLIONS IN PAPER IN DEUTSCHE BANK

Liquid Assets Rose in 1918 to 6,290,000,000 Marks—Dividend 12 Per Cent.

But Report Admits Big Figures Don't Mean Real Gain In German Business.

In submitting the forty-ninth annual report of the Deutsche Bank, Germany's greatest private financial institution, the Board of Management frankly admits that the increase in the bank's turnover from 180,000,000,000 marks in 1917 to 243,000,000,000 marks in 1918 doesn't indicate any great gain in business, but only shows how German paper money has depreciated and how wages and prices have risen. At normal exchange a mark equals 23.8 cents, but at present the rate is about 7 cents.

The report, which is printed in the Deutsch Allgemeine Zeitung and other German papers, devotes considerable space to telling how much the Deutsch Bank has done for its 13,529 officials and clerks, and it insists that its employes were so satisfied with its efforts to improve their working and living conditions that when the Berlin bank clerks went on strike last Winter the majority of the Deutsche Bank's clerks were against walking out, and only did so because of fear of the wrath of their fellow-workers in the other establishments.

In 1918 the personnel of the bank, although only numbering 207 more than in the preceding year, drew 60,700,000 marks (an average salary of about 4,500 marks,) against 41,900,000 marks (about 3,150 a piece) in 1917. Thus far in 1919 the bank has appropriated 9,000,000 marks for the payment of extra allowances to its employes, besides granting a wage raise to all those receiving less than 8,000 marks a year, beginning Jan. 1, and ranging from 5 to 25 per cent. During 1918 wages were raised and special allowances totaling 2,500,000 marks were paid. In noting that the bank's running expenses in 1918, not including taxes and special payments, amounted to 69,068,648 marks, against 21,227,217 in 1913, the last peace year, the management remarks:

"It is true that the uncanny rise in the cost of operation is due to the depreciation of our money standard and the general increase in prices, but it is also materially due to the demands of the personnel, in connection with a decreased labor output and a shorter working day."

The bank's net earnings totaled 43,152,564 marks, to which was added a carryover of 6,423,569 from 1917. A dividend of 12 per cent. on the capital of 275,000,000 marks took 33,000,000, the members of the Board of Supervisors got 1,138,440 marks out of the special 5 per cent. fund set aside for them out of the profits left after the payment of dividends at the rate of 6½ per cent., 13,500,000 was used to cover extra payments to employes, and the balance of 1,037,893 was carried over. The bank's capital and reserves remained at 505,000,000 marks. The number of accounts rose from 530,787 in 1917 to 573,387. Last year the dividend rate was 14 per cent. The Deutsche Bank's deposits increased 1,071,000,000 marks during 1918, and its liquid assets, most of them in Government notes and bonds, rose from 5,033,000,000 to 6,290,000,000 marks, with a liquidating value estimated at 91 per cent.

The report notes with regret the resignation of Arthur von Gwinner as President of the Board of Directors on March 31, after having spent twenty-five years in the management of the bank, but it points out that the bank will still have the benefit of his knowledge as a director in many of its subsidiary institutions and also says that he is to be elected a member of the Board of Supervisors. The building situation during 1918 was such that the projected "Arthur von Gwinner Health Casino" planned by the bank for its employes could not be constructed, but a casino was purchased near Detmold for that purpose. The impossibility of obtaining the necessary food supplies, however, delayed the opening of this institution.

In its foreword to the detailed report the Board of Directors adds its contribution to the general German protest over the hardships imposed by the Treaty of Paris, and it also joins in the plea of not guilty by citing a report of the British banking officials in control of its London branch to the effect that while England was preparing to attract gold on July 27, 1914, Germany and Austria made shipments of the yellow metal to London and Paris as late as July 31. This the Deutsche Bank considers weighty evidence, calculated to show that German financiers did not know that war was at hand.

JEWISH CONGRESS TO MEET.

Will Be Reconvened to Receive Report of Peace Delegates.

The American Jewish Congress, which met last December in Philadelphia, is making plans to reconvene to receive the reports of its delegates to the Paris Peace Conference. The date of the congress has not yet been set, but it is expected that this will be done in the near future. The new session of the congress is expected to deal with questions affecting the Jewish people in Europe who have now received or are about to receive equal civil and minority rights among the populations that make up the new and enlarged States of Eastern Europe.

The report to be presented by the European Commission is to deal also with the progress which has been made in having the allied nations recognize the Jewish historic claim to Palestine. The delegation from American Jewry, which was sent to Paris cooperated with a similar delegation from other countries, which together formed the Committee of Jewish Delegations at the Peace Conference.

Newburger League Organized.

The Newburger League, organized to promote the candidacy of Supreme Court Justice Joseph E. Newburger, was launched yesterday at a meeting of east side residents, held at 271 East Seventh Street, where the league's headquarters will be. Milton M. Schwartz presided and condemned "the practices of those who dictate the nomination of candidates for judicial honors, regardless of the recognition due to men who, like Joseph E. Newburger, have honored the bench by clean, capable, impartial administration of justice."

SEIZE TREASURE DROPPED FROM PLANE

Smuggled Into Sweden by Prince of Wied for ex-King of Saxony, Prisoners Assert.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 10.—The first case of smuggling by air is reported from the south coast of Sweden, where for some time has been living a German couple, who yesterday, when an airplane coming over the Baltic from the south was right above the village, were seen to signal busily to the airman, following which two packages were thrown down.

A coastguard, suspecting smuggling, chased the couple, who succeeded in eluding the guard, but the telephone and telegraph were set working between Malmö, Trelleborg, and Stockholm, and the fugitives were caught with the packages.

When opened these were found to contain fine laces, jewelry, and Government bonds for a very large amount. The Germans asserted that the packages were thrown down by the Prince of Wied, who wanted to place the valuables in safety for the ex-King of Saxony, to whom they belonged.

There are five Princes of Wied who possibly could have flown in an airplane, Frederick, head of the royal house, who is 57 years old; his sons, Hermann, 20 years old, who was a Lieutenant in the German Army, and Dietrich, 18 years old, and his brothers, William, 43 years, and Victor, 42 years old. William is the best known member of the family by reason of his brief and ignominious tenor of the position of King of Albania, tendered to him by Essad Pasha in 1914. Victor was Secretary of Legation at the German Embassy in Christiania. None is directly related to the royal house of Saxony.

Senator Foley's Father Dead.

James Foley, who died yesterday at his home, 316 East Eighteenth Street, was the father of State Senator James A. Foley, who recently married the daughter of Charles F. Murphy. Previous to his marriage Senator Foley made his home with his father and mother. There will be a requiem mass at the Church of the Epiphany, Second Avenue and Twenty-first Street, on Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

STEALS HIS LIFE SAVING.

Burglars Get $7,000 Belonging to Aged Sexton.

Burglars who entered the office of St. Agnes Chapel of Trinity Parish, 121 West Ninety-first Street, late Friday night stole from the safe $7,000 in cash and Liberty Bonds, the entire fortune of the aged sexton, Thomas Brown, representing his savings of more than fifty years.

How the burglars entered is a mystery. Detectives from the West 100th Street station have found no marks on the lawn or shrubs in the rear of the office. When the sexton arrived Saturday morning, he found the safe door open and the combination turned so that it would not shut. All the drawers of the safe had been ransacked.

The police believe the safe was opened by someone who knew the combination. "Yet I never told the combination to any one in the world," said the sexton last night, "not even to my wife and boy. This is a heavy blow to me. Those men took everything I had of value in the world."

LOS ANGELES SEES FLEET.

Thousands View an American Dreadnought for the First Time.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 10.—Thousands of residents of Los Angeles and other nearby towns and cities today for the first time saw or trod the decks of an American dreadnought when they visited this port, where the Pacific Fleet arrived yesterday. Other thousands gathered in Exposition Park to hear an address by Secretary of the Navy Daniels.

"To the West coast," said Mr. Daniels, "the coming of the fleet is significant because it has come, not for a day, but forever. It will be a permanent defense against any possible aggression from any foreign foe."

Later enlisted men of the fleet were guests at a Wild West show, with Douglas Fairbanks and Will Rogers in charge.

Don't Be Deceived When You Buy Linoleum

When you go into a store to buy linoleum, make sure you get it, and not a felt paper product that closely resembles linoleum and which is frequently sold under the name of "Linoleum," "Felt Base Linoleum," "Enamelled Linoleum," "New Process Linoleum," etc. The Federal Trade Commission has decided that such felt paper floor coverings are not linoleum, and that their sale under the name, "Linoleum," deceives and misleads the public, and hence is a violation of the Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914.

The Commission finds that the word, "linoleum," has a definite meaning, and may only properly be used to describe a floor covering composed of oxidized oil and gums intimately mixed with ground cork or wood flour, pressed on a suitable fabric back. The Commission further finds that floor coverings made of felt paper saturated with asphalt, with a pattern painted upon the surface, are not linoleum, and must not be described, advertised, or sold as linoleum.

One manufacturer of felt paper floor coverings has been ordered by the Commission to stop using the word, "linoleum," in connection with his product and to discontinue its use in the name of his company until such time as he may manufacture linoleum.

Linoleum enjoys an enviable reputation as a tough, wear resisting and sanitary floor covering. There are three easy ways to distinguish linoleum from painted felt paper floor coverings:

1. Linoleum has a burlap back.
2. Linoleum does not tear easily.
3. The edge of felt paper floor coverings is always black.

The public is invited to report any violation of the Commission's ruling, on the part of any store, to the Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C., or to any of the undersigned manufacturers of linoleum.

NEW BOOKS.

THE SCREEN

A screen version of "The Elder Miss Blossom," an English novel, by Ernest Hendrie and Metcalfe Woode, has come to America from England and is at the Strand this week under the cheapening title, "Choosing a Wife." Although it cannot accurately be described as a photoplay, even in the customary loose usage of the word, because it depends so much upon text, it has several points in its favor in the inevitable comparison with American productions.

In the first place, it brings a story which, if nothing new under the sun, is different from the more or less similar narratives told and retold in native moving pictures, and, on the whole, better constructed than they are. Also the acting, while not superior to the best screen pantomime this country can offer, is a decided improvement on the familiar pretty-girl-handsome-man performance. All of the actors are suited to their parts and the principal players meet the peculiar requirements of the screen successfully, except when they attempt to express themselves by speaking words that are missed by the camera, which they do too frequently. The woman who takes the part of the elder Miss Blossom, whose name is not printed on the program, but who is said to be Mina Grey, is an emotional actress of noteworthy ability.

The production is quite as good photographically as any but an exceptional American work.

The story deals with a nearly tragic romance of middle age. The elder Miss Blossom is forty and has spent her life at the service of her widowed brother and his daughter. Every one accepts and loves her in her maternal and matronly role, and no one suspects that her heart is still pulsing to the touch of romance. Nor does she, until it comes.

There is a man, an explorer, long past his youth, who meets the family. He falls in love with the girl, but does not tell her so directly, and, just before leaving on an expedition, owing to a mistake in names, he gives the elder Miss Blossom reason to believe that he desires to marry her when he returns. During the years of his absence she is occupied with dreams and plans of her wedding, while he, lost in the South Seas, has visions of the young girl whom he hopes to make his wife.

It is in the pathos and tensity of this situation and its working out that the motion picture has its appeal, and because the scenes of it, with one regrettable exception, are well made and acted, "Choosing a Wife" (that name hurts) arouses and sustains the interest. The exception is the scene in which the explorer and the younger Miss Blossom discover the mistake that has been made. It is a difficult scene, but with sufficient skill and care could have been made in harmony with the rest of the story. As it is, it suddenly jerks the photoplay into comedy, as was evidenced yesterday afternoon when the spectators laughed as if the joke was on the elder Miss Blossom. Changing the scene's subtitles now, however, would do much to recover it.

An interesting picture on the Strand program is "A Japanese Study," an Eating-Chester, giving glimpses of industry and agriculture as practiced in Japan.

"The Peace of Roaring River," at the Rialto this week, is the best photoplay in which Pauline Frederick has appeared recently. Not only is Miss Frederick's performance above her average, but the treatment of the story distinguishes it from the common run. For this treatment Victor L. Schertzinger, whose work is familiar through a number of Charles Ray's pictures, apparently is responsible. If this be true, it seems that this is the first time, in late years at any rate, that he has directed a picture for Miss Frederick, but it should not be the last. He seems able to bring out the best of Miss Frederick's abilities, and his skill in making scenes expressive in themselves adds greatly to the effectiveness of a story.

Miss Frederick has worthy support, especially from Thomas Holding as the Western hero, Hardee Kirkland as his friend, Corinne Barker as the villainess, and Lydia Yeamans Titus as a lodging-house keeper.

In itself the story is simply a plot. Madge Nelson is discharged from a city hospital with the injunction that she must live in the country. She is poor, however, and cannot get out of the city. On her landlady's advice she answers a matrimonial advertisement and enters into correspondence with one whom she supposes to be Hugo Ennis, a miner in Nevada. She finally goes West to marry him, but learns that he had not inserted the advertisement and had never heard of her. A girl of the town, angered by Ennis's lack of interest, had arranged everything in order to humiliate him. Of course, it all ends happily.

Major Jack Allen's "Lion Trapping" take the place of the usual scenic at the Rialto, and the comedy is "Cupid's Hold-Up," a Christie piece.

The photoplay at the Rivoli is "Wagon Tracks," with William S. Hart; the scenic is "Separate Trails," a Bruce picture, and the comedy is "Foxy Ambrose," featuring Mark Swain.

TO SING "DREAM OF MARY."

Columbia Chorus in Costume to Give Quaint Morality Play.

The first of three festival concerts will be held in the Columbia Gymnasium tonight, at 8:15 o'clock, by a chorus of 200 men and women students attending the University Summer School. Horatio Parker's "The Dream of Mary," after the manner of the old "morality plays," will be produced for the first time in New York. The words are by John Jay Chapman. The oratorio, which will be conducted by Professor Walter Henry Hall, had its premier presentation at the Norfolk, Conn., music festival last year.

Costumes used at that time have been lent to the Columbia chorus by Carl Stoeckel. The soloists are Sydney Thompson, Dicie Howell, Fred Paton, Elizabeth Wilson, Alice Butterfield, and Helen Cullan, and F. Lorenz Smith will be concertmaster of the orchestra.

TO OPEN ROOSEVELT DRIVE.

Memorial Organizations Completed in Many States.

The organization which will conduct the campaign for $5,000,000 to finance the Roosevelt Memorial has been completed in most of the States. In each State the campaign will be directed by a Chairman who will be assisted by county and city organizations.

Among the State Chairmen announced yesterday by Colonel William Boyce Thompson, National President of the Roosevelt Memorial Association, were George W. Perkins for New York City, Governor Thomas E. Campbell of Arizona, Governor William D. Stephens of California, ex-U. S. Senator Leroy Percy of Mississippi, Judge Jeter C. Pritchard of North Carolina, Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, Governor Henry J. Allen of Kansas, Colonel Austen Colgate of New Jersey, ex-Secretary of War Luke E. Wright of Tennessee, Governor Peter Norbeck of South Dakota, and Governor Robert D. Carey of Wyoming.

Regional conferences, at which the State Chairmen and the State Committees from groups of States will discuss the plans for the Roosevelt campaign, will be held in ten cities within the next few weeks. The first of these conferences, at which campaigners from seven of the Central States will be present, will be held in the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, on Thursday next, and will be addressed by Colonel Thompson and Major Gen. Leonard Wood. The other cities in which conferences will be held, and the dates, follow: St. Paul, Aug. 15; Salt Lake City, Aug. 15; Portland, Ore., Aug. 18; Dallas, Aug. 19; Kansas City, Aug. 19; San Francisco, Aug. 20; Atlanta, Aug. 21; New York, Sept. 3; Boston, Sept. 4.

The plans of the Roosevelt Memorial Association include a magnificent monument at Washington and the establishment of a public park at Oyster Bay, in which may be included eventually the Roosevelt home at Sagamore Hill with its contents, thus preserving it for national use, like Mount Vernon and the Lincoln Home at Springfield, Ill.

GOSPEL OF 'THE FULL CAN.'

Elimination of Waste Matter Urged Upon Packers as a Saving Device.

The "gospel of the full can," is being preached this year to commercial canners as a means for reducing the high cost of living without hurting anybody's profits, by the Department of Agriculture through its Bureau of Chemistry, which enforces the Federal Food and Drugs Act, commonly called the "Pure Food Law."

Inspectors of the Bureau of Chemistry will visit personally as many of the canneries this season as they can reach. They advise that all cans of food should be packed as full as practicable without injury to quality. They also advise housewives and other purchasers to note the relative amounts of solids and liquids in the cans they buy, and to give preference to the products of producers that seem to want to give a square deal to the home larder. Examinations of a large number of cans put up by different firms reveal a wide divergence in this particular.

The Bureau of Chemistry specialists have made investigations to determine exactly how much solid food—food from which the liquid has been drained—may be put up in the cans of different sizes in common use without injuring the quality of the product. A certain amount of liquid, which varies with the different products, is necessary. The addition of more liquid results in less food in the can, makes an inferior product, wastes shipping and storing space, and is unfair to the consumer. An honest pack promotes fair dealing, conserves containers, food, and shipping facilities, and aids the development of the canning industry.

The quantity of drained food, exclusive of liquid, that can be put efficiently and economically in each of the various sized cans has been determined for peas, beans, cherries, pears, and peaches, and the canning industry has been advised of the results. The drained weights for other fruits and vegetables will be announced to the canning industry as they are determined.

In making a declaration of contents on cans of fruits and vegetables under the net weight requirement of the Federal Food and Drugs Act, the total weight of the contents of the can, liquid included, must be declared.

"Follies" to Aid Bide-a-Wee.

A performance of the "Greenwich Village Follies," the proceeds of which will go to the Ambulance Fund of the Bide-a-Wee Home for Animals, will be held at the Nora Bayes Theatre, 216 West Forty-fourth Street, on Sunday evening, Aug. 24. A special program will enlist Mrs. R. E. Treman, formerly Mrs. Vernon Castle. All the "Follies" performers have volunteered, including the star, Bessie McCoy Davis.

THREE MEN STAGE HOLDUP.

Proprietor and Customers in Delicatessen Store Lose $500.

Early yesterday morning three well-dressed young men entered the delicatessen store of Hammer & Klein, at 2,547 Eighth Avenue, near 136th Street, and held up Benjamin Hammer and two customers, robbing them of nearly $500 in jewelry and cash. They forced the men into a rear storeroom at the point of their pistols, and then rifled their pockets. They then backed out of the store, keeping their victims covered, jumped into a waiting automobile, and fled up Eighth Avenue.

At 2 A. M. a young man entered the store and asked for 50 cents' worth of cold beef. While Hammer was cutting it two others entered and simultaneously all three pulled their guns and ordered the proprietor and two customers into the rear room. One of the customers was Irving Pryor, owner of a café at 135th Street and Fifth Avenue. The name of the other is known to the police, but was not divulged last night. From Hammer they took a stickpin worth $110 and $25 in cash. From the unknown customer they got $100, and on their way out they lifted $150 from the cash register. As they were leaving they said, "You d—— fools, while we were fighting in France you were here making money." Hammer reported the hold-up to the 135th Street Police Station.

Dowling Candidate for Judge.

In the list of candidates in the primary elections, published yesterday, the name of George J. S. Dowling of Far Rockaway, Queens County, was omitted. Mr. Dowling will contest the candidacy of John J. Ruhn, the Democratic organization candidate for Supreme Court Judge in the Second Judicial Department. He is a member of the firm of McDivitt & Dowling.

ARMY FLIERS' NEW RECORD.

Covered 60,487 Miles Last Week—Fire Patrol Active.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—During the past week army aviators covered a distance of 60,487 miles in cross-country flying in the United States. This established a new record for the service in total number of miles covered in a single week. It does not include the flying of enlisted men under going instruction.

Forest fires in Oregon and Washington, according to information reaching the Air Service tonight, were so great as to fill the air with smoke over both States and render flying difficult. Oregon has just been added to the first forest aerial patrol which has been in operation in California for seven weeks. During the past week army aviators in the aviation forest patrol covered a distance of 8,530 miles in the States of California and Oregon and discovered thirty-five fires. During seven weeks of operation the aerial forest patrol has covered 54,906 miles and discovered ninety-one fires.

For New Yorkers, too.

Mr. Howard Kyle, founder of the Actors' Equity Association, who for more than six years served as a member of its Counsel and in other capacities without remuneration, has resigned from the Actors' Equity Association. In connection with his resignation Mr. Kyle sent the following letter to Mr. E. H. Sothern, who has also since resigned from the Actors' Equity Association:

New York, August 5, 1919.

Dear Sothern:

I am sorry I didn't get a word to you before you were induced to send a letter to the Actors' Equity Association approving the course its officers and Counsel have wrong-headedly taken. For once the managers are right in their stand. They have recognized the Actors' Equity Association as an organization and they invited its representatives to meet them and make a mutual agreement for the uniform adoption and use of an improved form of the United Managers' Protective Association-Actors' Equity Association contract to cover a period of three or five years. Each manager in the new producing Managers' Protective Association (and it includes practically all of them) is under a bond by which he would forfeit $10,000 if he breached any agreement made by his organization. That is, any agreement like that of the adoption of a uniform standard contract. This was the very situation, or should I say consummation, toward which the Actors' Equity Association has been aiming for six years. Some of the radicals misapprehended the spirit of co-operation that possessed the managers and attributed their action to motives of fear, thereupon an utterly foolish and unnecessary ultimatum was issued concerning extra performances which were made to include legal holiday matinees and Sunday appearances. The arbitrary action was taken despite insistent warnings I made to the Counsel of its ill-advisedness. The aggression came, you see, from our side when the managers were in an amenable state of mind and actually willing, as they are now, to stand for a clause by which all salaries shall be reckoned by the performance.

In order to save their own faces our representatives proposed publicly that the whole matter of a contract be given to an outside Board of Arbitration, thus trying to embarrass the managers. As I openly predicted, the managers said there was nothing to arbitrate, and they have proceeded to use the standard contract—United Managers' Protective Association-Actors' Equity Association—changing only the clause as to how any issue may be arbitrated; meanwhile, poor men and women who are actually working under equitable conditions are forced to strike as the result of the bad leadership of our Association.

It is important to remember that the accepted Actors' Equity Association-United Managers' Protective Association contract was actually drawn up in the first instance by the Actors' Equity Association itself and the clauses consenting to play Sunday night performances and legal holiday matinees were put into this contract by the actors themselves. The changes now demanded, therefore, constitute additions to our own contract which we have proclaimed as equitable all over the world. No one has ever pretended that the contract, which is a minimum one, is the best that might be secured, and it is only fair to recall that Mr. Marc Klaw, President of the United Managers' Protective Association, spoke at the ratification supper in November, 1917, saying: "This is a history-making occasion, but the contract as it stands is only a beginning."

(Signed) Yours Very Truly,

HOWARD KYLE.

DEMISE OF THE PLAN.

It took twenty-five years to destroy the free silver coinage delusion. In less than one week the Plumb plan to have the railroads owned and operated for the benefit of labor and politics has been damaged beyond possibility of repair. Mr. PLUMB himself was the most efficient agent in the demolishing of his own plan. When he told the House Committee on Interstate Commerce that the Railroad Brotherhoods men had just come into possession of evidence that "the railway interests, led by Wall Street, were already beginning a campaign to wreck the systems at the expense of the investors," he gave the committee an unexpected opportunity to take his measure as an economist and social reformer. That statement disclosed his tastes and inclinations as well as the limits of his understanding. He made a further venture in self-exhibition on Saturday. Mr. SANDERS of the committee read to him this statement: "All forests, mines, and waters having a national importance shall be declared national property," and asked him if he approved it. He replied that he did. He was then informed that the statement read by Mr. SANDERS was a paragraph from the Constitution of the Russian Soviet Republic. Mr. PLUMB was entirely consistent, for his plan and the manifesto of the Brotherhoods in which the application of it was demanded are saturated with Soviet principles.

In its motives and promptings, in its form and expression, the Plumb plan and the Brotherhoods' manifesto are of German origin. The plan is based on the doctrines of KARL MARX, and Marxian socialism is the foundation of Russian sovietism. All this was made clear, as we have said, in less than a week, by the manifesto and by the testimony of Mr. PLUMB and the representatives of the Brotherhoods before the House committee. The consequence is that, as has been stated in many dispatches from Washington, the Sims bill embodying the plan has gone to its death; it will not be reported by the committee. The country formed an instant judgment of the plan, understood its origin, saw what it would lead to, and for that reason no part of the President's address to Congress on the cost of living was more heartily approved and applauded than those passages in which he admonished "the more extreme leaders of organized labor" to take "a sober second thought" about some of their proposals. "There must be no threats," said the President. "The world has just destroyed the arbitrary force of a military junta. It will live under no other. All that is arbitrary and coercive is in the discard. Those who seek to employ it only prepare their own destruction." He warned them that the country is not taking thought about the selfish interests of a single class; the public concern is for the welfare of the whole people.

THRACIAN COMPROMISES.

Now we hear that the Allied Council, which has been debating over Thrace for the past few weeks without getting anywhere, is talking of dividing it into four or five parts. One of these will be attached to the free State of Constantinople, others will go to Greece, and still another will be a free State of its own.

It is ungracious, perhaps, to criticise a body so obviously in desperation over some way out, but an independent State of Western Thrace seems an extraordinarily inept political creation. The population of Thrace includes Greeks, Bulgarians, and Turks. None of these groups wants to be independent. The Turks are the most numerous race, but fortunately nobody intends to give Thrace back to the Turks. The Greeks are a close second and the Bulgarians are very far behind. The Bulgars, however, claim as their brothers the Pomaks, a race of Moslem religion and Slavic blood; but even with them included the Bulgars are far outnumbered. Certain districts near the old Bulgarian frontier are principally Bulgarian in population, and these the plan of Mr. VENIZELOS would leave to Bulgaria; his arrangement, which follows the national lines of demarkation so far as there are any, would bring about 70,000 Bulgarians under Greek control and leave 60,000 Greeks to Bulgaria.

The Bulgars had no notion of absorbing Thrace till the victories of 1912 brought it into their hand. Our delegates seem to hold out against the Greek claim, which is incontestably valid unless we want to give the province back to the Turk, on the ground that Bulgaria must have her outlet to the sea. A commercial outlet does not necessitate political sovereignty, and the Bulgars who struck our allies in the back do not deserve the tenderness which our delegates continue to show them against the voice of all the other great Powers.

THE CONDITION PRECEDENT.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. BRANDEGEE are wroth with Mr. WILSON because he tells the plain truth obvious to the American people, however bitter to the Senatorial victims of Wilsonphobia. Peace, the ending of the state of uncertainty, doubt, and distrust which now distracts the minds of nations and peoples, hampers business energy and enterprise, delays or prevents the execution of projects of financial, commercial, and industrial renewal and restoration, is a condition precedent of economic improvement. Peace and the League of Nations to continue and insure it are the necessary beginning of a general feeling of hope, of confidence, of plans for production and interchange that cannot be undertaken in the present ambiguous conditions.

The tendency to unruliness, aggression, to disrespect of solemn engagements, to national or racial truculence all too visible in Europe and Asia, is due in large part to the influence of this irritating twilight, "neither peace nor war." Unless the League of Nations is speedily set at work, larger disorders, a longer agony of the nations, economic deterioration, smoldering or flaming war, reprisals, grabbing of territory, more waste and destruction, will come. While the Senate dawdles, confusion, national egotisms and feuds are nourished abroad because the international body of security and control is not at work. The Old World and the New alike need peace and the guaranteeing League. Every day that peace and the League are withheld is a day lost to the renaissance of order and prosperity.

If the Senate is to pluck out something from or add something to the Treaty, may not other nations than the United States do the same? Instead of the Treaty signed at Versailles, there may be in effect half a dozen treaties, and Germany, seeking sullenly her chance of escape, may see her moment to disown a different instrument than that she so reluctantly signed.

How can anybody in business make his plans, how can any man or nation know where he or it stands, how can agriculture, industry, trade, spring up from their ruins in a dozen countries, while this equivocal interim, "neither peace nor war," continues? How much longer will the disintegrating and discordant coterie of Senate hunkers kick against the will of the American people, the welfare and peace of the world, against peace, confidence, business, the restoration of economic equilibrium?

THE PRESIDENT SHOWS THE WAY

In Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and probably other States there have been prompt echoes of the President's rallying cry against the profiteers and the unjust cost of living. Two thousand farmers have been indicted for combining to raise the price of milk. The "Big Five" packers have been summoned as witnesses against food profiteers. A minor sugar trust has been bailed on a Federal charge of profiteering, and so the list runs on. If the facts sustain the charges a few convictions will be worth many sermons, even though of the excellence of the President's address. It is better to prove and punish "vicious practices" than to denounce them, and the closer the prosecution to the crime the better the chance of success. Therefore the response of the States to the President's example is encouraging. The President truly says that strikes "only make the matter worse," for they check production, and abundance is the best remedy for high prices.

The peculiarity of the present position is that scarcity is not the cause of excessive prices. After the Napoleonic wars England declared embargoes of exports in order to keep at home goods needed by consumers. But an embargo on exports when there was an abundance, even for those hungry abroad, would be a novelty, with perhaps an unpleasant reaction. Farmers now are demanding that they should be allowed to take what prices they can exact in a market clamoring to export untold quantities. They are refusing to sell to the Government at the guarantee price because foreigners bid more.

A more promising line of attack is that on the hoards of food in cold storage, and on the retailers who may be asking more profit than is right for their service in distribution. Publicity is a good reliance for extortion from ignorance. If people want fancy goods with credit and service, they have a right to find the money to pay for them, and need no help. But if others want help in knowing when prices are above a fair schedule, they have a just claim to be told what is right by authority. The fixing of a maximum price drives goods into hiding. The fixing of a minimum price permits profiteering. But the naming of a fair price here has seemed to France to work so well that it is adopting our ways, and thus encouraging us to persevere in them. Mr. HOOVER'S methods of regulating prices all along the line, from first producer to ultimate consumer, have also been approved abroad, and there are foreign hints of procedure in our Paris cablegrams.

There is an easy explanation of the anomaly of ample visible supplies simultaneously with underconsumption. The supplies are visible, but unattainable through difficulties of transportation. Much of the goods the world needs is in the wrong places. Difficulties of transportation are increased by strikes, and the accumulation of supplies gorges the storehouses, although the owners would be glad to empty them if the goods could be conveyed to the consumers. For this reason the President suggests assumption of "national control of the processes of distribution." The opening of the channels of distribution is approved and established practice, and the President has done good service in that way. But the refusal of admission to interstate commerce of those not licensed according to unknown conditions must remain arguable without further knowledge of details. Commerce is a right, not a privilege upon conditions, and not all our commissions have deserved approval, even though they were appointed with good reasons and have done their best.

We must help Europe, if only for selfish reasons. She is our best customer, and [illegible] is as necessary for us to sell as [illegible] to buy. In proportion that [illegible] distracted and miserable, and [illegible] sober in mind and easy in our financial conditions, it is both our duty and policy to lend a helping hand to save the world from chaos and ourselves from destructive reaction. The President's reference to our "silent masses" as a reliance against "distempered action" touches the heart of the whole topic. The froth and scum on the surface of our affairs, and the dregs of our melting pot, give no idea of the sober forces between on which our citizenry and our foreign friends may rely for self-help and assistance. There is a world of encouragement in the rejection of the railway soviet which was presented to Congress with such assurance, and which was not even filed for future reference. Even railway employés are dissociating themselves from threats made on their behalf. American citizens are not Russian peasants to submit to charlatan dictators until destroyed.

THE STRIKE'S LESSONS.

The people of New York will know whose counsel was helpful in bringing to an end the sinister strike on the Brooklyn Rapid Transit and whose intervention was insincere and mischievous. No thanks are due Mayor HYLAN for the return to normal conditions in Brooklyn, for he was an obstruction rather than a help in the solution of a vexed problem. Although he takes credit to himself for smoothing the way to a settlement of the strike, no one is deceived, no one thinks that he made any real contribution to it. "I am always glad to do my little bit for the public," says the Mayor, coming to the footlights. Well, it was a very little bit, if it could be discerned at all under the most powerful microscope. "It was quite apparent," he says, with amazing assurance, "that the service would have to be restored immediately." It could have been restored in twenty-four hours, even less, after the strike began, if the Mayor had given the Receiver the police protection he asked, or if, indeed, the Mayor had not shown by his perverse officiousness where his sympathies lay, a manifestation that the leaders of the strike were quick to take advantage of and that the dullest of the "pickets" understood.

Mr. HYLAN cannot throw dust in the eyes of the people of New York by putting in a claim for services rendered in the settlement of this ugly labor trouble, because everybody knows that the chief credit for bringing Mr. GARRISON and the striking employés together belongs to Public Service Commissioner LEWIS NIXON, whose clear head evolved the plan that ended all strife, and whose firm will triumphed over every obstacle. The President's influence was also felt, although indirectly exercised. His is the greatest power for conciliation and peace in the country, and when he said in his address to Congress, with a side glance at discord in the ranks of industry, that he believed "the more extreme leaders of "organized labor will presently yield "to a sober second thought," his words were heard in certain quarters and heeded.

The adversity experienced in Brooklyn but a few days ago will have its salutary uses. There has been the spectacle of a strike of traction employés carried on riotously, defiantly, arrogantly, because the authorities would not do their whole duty and by their example encouraged the disorder they exclaimed against with uplifted eyes. The community knows well enough that Mr. GARRISON was right when he declared that the strike would have ended quickly if employés who wanted to do a day's work and were loyal to the company had been protected by the police in sufficient force. And the community knows the facts about "the bit" that Mayor HYLAN did, and how he and Corporation Counsel BURR ran in double harness. The community knows that Receiver GARRISON was ignored, flouted, and intrigued against. Fortunately, his record for public usefulness and honesty of purpose speaks eloquently for him. The community has taken the measure of the leader and the paid adviser of the strikers and can judge of their solicitude for the public welfare and tranquillity by their utterances.

The next time there is a strike of such proportions the people will demand absolute neutrality on the part of Mayor HYLAN and a vigorous enforcement of law and order; they will require that the stern admonition of Receiver HEDGES of the New York Railways Company, that employés who decide to stick to their jobs shall not be murderously beaten by strikers and that property shall also have protection, be not disregarded by politicians and demagogues.

ACTING ON THE SIDEWALK.

Loyal members of the Actors' Equity Association should not permit their instincts as comedians to get the better of their plain duty as strikers. Pooh-Bah is one of the fattest parts known to the stage, but it should be confined to the stage. It does not speed the great cause when two actors, who happen to be also managers, appear on the sidewalk and confide to the populace the extreme embarrassment which they would suffer in both capacities if they permitted themselves as actors to break their contracts with themselves as managers. Again, when an able and aerial funmaker diverts the public at the foot of the elevator by his protests of undying fealty to the cause of Equity, and then ascends the lift to resume his place on the stage above, he must expect his triumphant manager to bill him henceforth as Edward Recantor. Sabotage may have its place in the program of the workingman, but few will take seriously the threat of a leading lady to ruin the productions in which she appears by secretly neglecting to powder her nose. Such tactics may temporarily induce the public to prefer the performances on the sidewalk to those within; but the dictatorship of the proletariat is a serious cause or it is nothing.

There is the question, furthermore, of casualties among innocent bystanders. Already it is reported that one unsuspecting citizen, exercising his undoubted right to walk by a theatre entrance, exploded with laughter. Things have come to an intolerable pass when it is not safe for inhabitants of this metropolis either to ride or to walk. To the discerning observer the strategy of the Equity Association is obvious. Team play is the strikers' watchword. But let the actors remember that the Devil Dogs of the regular army have returned. If matters are allowed to come to a crisis, it will be their stern and solemn duty to suppress this riot of jocularity. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES was a wise man no less than a witty one. As strikers, certainly, our Thespians will do well to heed his precept and never dare to be as funny as they can.

One element in the populace, and by no means an inconsiderable element, has thus far succeeded in taking the crisis seriously. The chorus girls are forming a union which is to petition humbly for affiliation with the Equity Association, under the American Federation of Labor. Even if the strike continues to grow, it is manifestly impossible that they should all receive speaking parts, so the accession of strength to the strikers may be considerable. We should be loath to take sides in the great conflict; but from the point of view of the most detached and philosophic observer it is obvious that the strongest fortress of the striker is the absence, or at least the temporary abeyance, of the sense of humor.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A Strange Form of Docility. A curious and significant phenomenon, nearly or quite peculiar to times modern as distinguished from those not very remote as well as ancient, is to be observed whenever the public peace and comfort are disturbed in the way they invariably are disturbed by such strikes as the one that began on the transportation lines in Brooklyn last week and ended on Saturday night. The number of people who, by any possibility, can derive from the success of a strike like this advantages sufficiently great to make worth while endurance of the hardships and losses it imposes on nearly the whole population of a city is minute. Yet the huge majority composed of non-strikers have manifested as little inclination as ability either to help in the defense of their unquestionable rights and privileges or to give effectual expression to what they think of what is going on.

There have been strikes, of course, in which this inactivity of the general public was due to strong and unanimous sympathy for the strikers. That, however, is rare, and can occur only in communities with a single interest in which all share. Usually, as now, the general public is too little concerned by the result of a strike even to inform itself with any care as to the rights and wrongs of the conflict. It only knows that it wants the thing over as soon as possible, but from what is suffered through the strike and the incidental violences it makes no attempt to defend itself. Submission as to the inevitable is nearly or quite complete, although obviously, if the general public chose to exert its enormous physical strength, disturbance of the peace would end soon after it began, and that method of winning, or trying to win, strikes would be abandoned.

The Minority's Tyranny. That the public, as such, does not "take its own part," as Colonel ROOSEVELT put it, by resort to "direct action," to use the favorite phrase of the radical groups, is not inexplicable. Both men and women, in their several ways and degrees, still will resent insult and resist injury, if they can, but the insults and injuries must be personally intended as well as suffered. Otherwise, the common tendency and practice are to trust wholly to the police for defense, and to endure with a sort of resignation, as unavoidable, whatever results from the lack or imperfection of police protection.

This is the teaching or consequence of civilization, and it is therefore to be accepted as on the whole desirable, commendable, and advantageous. Certainly its results are better than were or would be the settlement by every man of all his quarrels and the avenging of all his injuries with his own fist or gun, but the benefits derived by the delegation to the police of practically all right or obligation to use force as an argument does have sometimes, and not as rarely as could be wished, the result of making easy and comparatively safe for minorities the offensive use of force as distinguished from its defensive use.

In the instance suggestive of these remarks it has enabled a few hundred men for days to keep a great city in a state of painful and dangerous excitement and to deprive it in large part of the cheap, quick, and convenient facilities of transportation on which its prosperity, and almost its life, depends.

A Difficult Matter Ill Handled. In the struggle which New York's health officials and the municipal administration have been making of late to solve the problem of drug addiction, few evidences of practical wisdom have been presented, and the results as yet achieved have been provocative of civic humiliation rather than of civic pride. The enrollment of the "addicts" and the measures adopted for supplying their admitted necessity for present, at least partial, indulgence of their "habit," have forced upon them an amount of publicity in many cases as undeserved as it was distressing, and a feature of the situation almost as bad as that one has been the inability of the administration to decide where it shall send the patients whom it purposes to cure, or treat for—the difference is a large one—their dreadful malady.

In this the course of the administration has been deplorably vacillating. Decision after decision has been made only to be revoked, and at least twice the revocation has been for insufficient reasons. Now the announced determination is to turn the sufferers from tuberculosis out of the Sea View Hospital, made for them at great expense and particularly adapted to meeting their needs, and to send there the addicts, who could be as well or better cared for elsewhere.

The many and cogent arguments against the selection of the Sea View Hospital as a retreat for drug victims were presented on this page Saturday in a letter from Dr. S. ADOLPHUS KNOPF, who speaks on the subject from long experience and much knowledge. His condemnation of the Sea View plan should have great weight, as should his opinion that the offer by the Rockefeller Foundation of buildings to be removed to the city's property in Warwick should have been and should be accepted as the best of all the solutions of this very difficult problem that have been proposed. The Mayor's announced disinclination to take anything from "the Rockefellers" was, of course, absurd. Obligation to "the Rockefellers" is something which, in matters medical, it long since has been impossible for anybody in the United States—or in the world, indeed—to escape. They have appreciably advanced medical science in several of its most important domains, and denial of it is possible only for carefully maintained ignorance.

Appreciation from Columbia.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Columbia University is fortunately situated, for within this great metropolis the courtesy and co-operation on the part of institutions, not primarily educational, supplement so uniquely the educational opportunities offered by the university. Among such institutions none offers this co-operation more advantageously than THE NEW YORK TIMES. Indeed, the detailed processes involved in the production of any large modern newspaper necessarily make possible a contact touching upon a wide range of educational values.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, however, on the occasion of the visits of four groups of Columbia University Summer session students, made this contact a distinctly personal one. Each of our visits, therefore, proved to be a specialized course in practical information actually and interestingly illustrated—not simply the theory, but the theory in splendid working operation, producing visible results; not only the principle but a score of principles working harmoniously in organizing so vague and so general a thing as news—north, east, west, south, in popular etymology, perhaps—into one convenient, serviceable daily educational medium. You will appreciate, then, how very much we appreciate a privilege so distinctly instructive. Hence it is my pleasure, on behalf of these students and on behalf of the university, to thank you, and most heartily, too, for four evenings so happily enjoyed.

Assistant to the Director, Summer Session, Columbia University, New York, Aug. 9, 1919.

War Wages and Army Wages.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a man just returned to civil life from two years of service in the navy I am thoroughly disgusted with the recent labor developments. These very machine-shop workers complain about the high cost of living, yet they can afford to strike and can plan to raise a $10,000,000 fund to buy votes and elect a Congress that will give the Government into their own power! These strikers are earning more than I am with a supposedly fine college education and technical training.

It is all rather disheartening to one who has just started in again to earn his own living after giving two of the best years of his life to his country and to the defense of these malcontents. If a few more of these strikers had been in the army at $30 per month instead of reaping war wages at home, perhaps running a street car or working in a railroad shop for 60 cents an hour, $4.80 a day, $144 a month, $1,728 a year, which exceeds a commissioned officer's pay in the army, would look good enough to them to keep them at it and satisfied for at least two years, at the end of which time, if we all work as hard and efficiently as we can, co-operating for the common good throughout the entire country, the high cost of living will certainly be materially reduced.

THE RAILROAD CRISIS.

And the Principles Upon Which Any Just Settlement of it Must Be Based.

By SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH.

Bretton Woods, N. H., Aug. 9.
To the Editor of The New York Times:

This is the supreme moment when every man who can speak, think or write, must use his brains to save America. The two pillars of Bolshevism are confiscation and murder. One of the railroad chieftains declared before the Congressional committee on Wednesday that he is opposed to a father having the right to bequeath his wealth to his son. This is confiscation. The other labor leader declared that he is ready to bring some men before a firing squad. That is murder.

Labor must have its rights, including good wages, reasonable hours, steady employment, and sanitary conditions, but these rights must be obtained under a government of law. The demand made by radical men that the railroads shall be given into the custody of the employes is made in entire forgetfulness of the fact that the railroads are in the custody of their employes, and that every officer, from yardmaster up to President, is, generally speaking, a promoted laborer. If the existing official organization of our railroads were to be destroyed today the remaining employes could not operate them until they had formed a precisely identical official organization.

Government operation has proved itself a frightful failure, and the railroads ought to be given back to their owners at once under a protective law, which shall provide for the private operation of each unit under the old system, but with a general board of directors to represent all the railroads, the employes and the public, from which every vestige of State and Federal control shall be excluded. This board should be clothed by act of Congress with power to make rates, adjust wages, approve the issue of securities, and authorize the consolidation of smaller roads into trunk systems. The Interstate Commerce Commission has long since proved its utter incapacity to be anything but a board of audit and accounting, and its powers should be restricted to that field.

In urging this simple plan, I am speaking my personal views, which are in opposition to the published opinions of nearly all of my railroad and business friends.

The rank and file of railroad employes are opposed to strikes, and the violence and suffering which inevitably follow strikes, and I know whereof I speak, for I have myself worked up from the most humble position in the railroad service. We should not tolerate men for leaders who declare that the owner of a Liberty bond shall have no right to bequeath it to his family and that savings banks and insurance policies shall no longer safeguard when the breadwinner dies. Nor should we deem men in this country as other than public enemies who would strike at the very life of the nation by conspiring for a strike on the railroads which feed our people with their daily bread. But firmness must go hand in hand with patience and concession.

The Mayor of New York states that Mr. Garrison, who is a very wise and able man, has refused to meet a committee of his railroad employes. If this were true—and it is not—it is an offense against the nation. The old condition of arrogancy when employers declared that they had nothing to arbitrate is gone forever and if such men still hold high places they should give way to others who will listen to their labor associates until seventy times seven, and yield on every reasonable point.

The trouble that has fallen upon the New York railroad system is the same that has made every street railroad in the United States insolvent, and the time has come when they should all have a ten-cent fare. The argument for the nationalization of all the great industries of this country is an argument for the termination of enterprise and progress, for the death of talent and ambition and for the lasting poverty of all our people.

When the Government touches business it destroys it. This turmoil, confusion and violence have followed every war in history, and we should all realize that the restoration of tranquillity and contentment in the breasts of those who toil is necessary before our country can enter upon the greatest period of prosperity which it has ever known.

Let labor and capital work confidently toward achievement and these unhappy discords will quickly cease. Having done our share to redeem Europe from destruction, let us now turn our eyes from Europe and get our own house in order. America first, America always.

SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR ALL.

Arbitration Should Be Enforced as Bulwark of Industrial Safety.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The strike on the B. R. T. following as it did innumerable other strikes in different parts of the country, and accompanied by a threat on the part of the leaders of the railway shopmen to stop every railroad wheel in America, makes the plain man ask: Is there no remedy for these industrial wars?

If the Germans had landed an army and tried to do exactly what the strikers have done, we should have fought them. Can we not provide a system which will do justice to both parties and prevent strikes in public service systems?

Some of these organizations have great wealth. It was asserted, and not denied, that the railroad brotherhoods who ordered a strike in August, 1916, had a million dollars in their treasury, had property amounting to fifteen millions more, and an income annually of not less than four million dollars. While corporations generally are required to make sworn returns of their receipts and expenses, and are accountable for those not only to their stockholders but to the public, there is no such requirement placed upon the unions.

A plan for industrial arbitration was in general presented to Congress by President Wilson in 1916, at the time of the impending and threatened railway strike. This recommendation he has just repeated. It was embodied in bills introduced in Congress in December, 1916, and in another bill presented in February, 1917, to the Legislature of New York, and considered by the Public Service Commission of that State. It recognizes the liberty of railroad companies and their men to make voluntary agreements, and the binding force of these agreements. The men retain their right to organize and make collective bargains. It provides for a wage board on which they shall have proportional representation, and which shall hear and determine disputes respecting hours, wages, and working conditions, subject to appeal to the commission. It gives the men security of employment, and, in the interest of the public, prohibits strikes pending negotiation, investigation, and determination.

It is a fundamental principle of American government that every citizen has equal civil rights. It is the duty of the Government to protect him in the reasonable exercise of these rights, and to prevent him from infringing on the rights of others; to provide tribunals which shall afford such protection and which shall enable each citizen, in case of disagreement as to what his rights are, to obtain a peaceable settlement of them.

A strike in a public service system is a violation of these rights. It is a combination by members of a secret order, which is not now accountable to the Government, to prevent citizens from exercising their lawful rights. The right of a citizen to travel on the public highways is absolute. A combination to prevent him from doing this is unlawful.

We must make these rich and privileged organizations subject to law, or give up the claim that we are living under a government of laws and not of men. Our system of American democracy is on trial. The sooner the majority of our citizens meet the issue the better.

VETERAN.
New York, Aug. 9, 1919.

TWO WOMEN.

Pity her not who at the bright day's close
Weeps o'er the petals of a long-dead rose,
A rose that in some treasured volume lies
Faded, but precious for its memories.
Gently her tears fall on the petals pale
That in the past such fragrance did exhale.
Her youth is gone, and Love will ne'er return
To lips where unforgotten kisses burn.

Nay, pity her who in a chamber dim
Sits desolate, and listening to no hymn
Of love from out the long dead bygone years,
Who hath no token to bedew with tears,
To whom the perfume of a faded flower
Returns not ghost-like in the twilight hour.
Ah! pity her whose sad lips pale and cold
Warm to no memory of a love long told.

ENGLAND'S PART.

A Retrospect of Her Four Years' Effort and the Final Victory.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Aug. 4 commemorated the fifth anniversary of the great and glorious part Great Britain played in the world war, the honor of hard-earned victory in which she so modestly shares with the Allies.

It was about Aug. 2, 1914, that the writer, in an interview with a prominent citizen of Germany who was also a close friend of Count von Bernstorff, learned from him that his Government believed absolutely that England could not possibly enter the war. When pressed for the reason he explained that Germany knew that Ireland was on the eve of a revolution and that an insurrection threatened India. But alas! "the best laid plans. * * *" There were three momentous days while the destiny of civilization hung upon England's decision! The fatal hour struck and the ready response of the great British Empire to the first call to arms included the loyal sons of Ireland and India.

Thus England answered, blasting Germany's hopes. From all the shores of her colonies poured forth the men of Britain to hurl themselves into battle with unflinching determination. These troops took part in the safeguarding of every frontier on three continents during the entire period of the war, and now Americans know these gallant English, Scotch and Irish men, these Canadians, New Zealanders, and Australians, as they never did before. Together they have faced the baptism of fire and it has consecrated the existing friendship between these two great peoples which nothing can destroy. The spirit of fair play with which the British fought, often to their own disadvantage—the way they played the game—demands the respect of all true sportsmen.

The great achievement of the British fleet has thrilled the world. The heroism of the men who manned her merchant ships made the feeding of the Allies possible. When Germany gave the order to sink without a trace there were sixty of these ships sunk in one week. Had these brave mariners faltered, the history of the world would have been a different story. Undaunted by Germany's threats, they continued to carry American troops, ammunition, equipment and vast stores of food. "The silent conquerors of the sea" played one of the most important rôles in defeating Germany.

The war is over and all must now recognize that it was the heroic spirit and loyalty of each of the allied nations that led to final victory. America, coming in at the most vital moment, proved the winning factor of the victorious end. Well may we be proud of those dauntless lads of ours who finished up the war in the true American way!

All this is a matter of history, and now comes the adjustment. Let us keep our faith and our trust in all our brave allies. Since the Irish question is constantly before us, America must recognize that Great Britain's desire is to settle this question once and for all when it comes up in the House of Commons some three months hence.

Why dwell on wrongs of the past? It is the future we must build for, and the present moment, with its desire for justice, is the time to lay the cornerstone of trust and faith and generosity, or all the blood shed on the battlefields of Europe has been in vain. The sense of justice that marks the Anglo-Saxon race, written down in the Magna Charta, is the inheritance of the English-speaking people. It is the keynote to strike for success in all national and international issues. It is the dominant quality of the underlying greatness of the British Empire.

England, when she faces her Home Rule problems, will not fail to remember those Irish soldiers who responded so loyally in the Empire's hour of need in the first early days of the war, and she will surely settle them on the same basic principle on which she fought, actuated always by the love of fair play that has won the admiration of all open-minded people. Depend upon it, she will see that Ireland has the form of government satisfactory to all—when the right moment comes.

GEORGIANA HARRIMAN OWEN.
New York, Aug. 6, 1919.

In Memory of Mr. Cremin.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Lawson Purdy has called attention in the public prints to the passing of the late Deputy Tax Commissioner, Joseph D. Cremin, who for upward of twenty years rendered most valuable services to the City of New York.

Mr. Cremin's knowledge of public utility property, together with his familiarity with such property erected and maintained in the city, was of inestimable help to the State Tax Commission, and I am very pleased to join in Mr. Purdy's tribute to the memory of a highly efficient and courteous public official.

Mr. Purdy does well to remind us that when such men as Mr. Cremin depart from us, those who knew them should call public attention to their work.

BALKANS OWE MUCH TO RED CROSS AID

Lieut. Col. Anderson, in Charge of Relief Work, Says Conditions Are Improved.

PEOPLE NO LONGER STARVE

Hospitals, Where Patients Formerly Died for Lack of Supplies, Now Well Equipped.

Conditions in all of the Balkan countries have been much improved within the last six months according to Lieut. Col. Henry W. Anderson, of Richmond, Va., who is in charge of the work of the American Red Cross there. These improved conditions, Colonel Anderson points out, have been largely brought about through the efforts of the Red Cross organization, which includes in its personnel sixty men and women from this city and vicinity.

"The famine, suffering and misery brought upon this part of Europe by the war," says Colonel Anderson, "have been mitigated in a wonderful degree by the help of the American people acting through the agency of the Red Cross and the Food Administration. Not only have these American workers brought material assistance to these afflicted people, but they have, also, by their presence given a moral stimulus that will help them to begin life anew and to provide means in the future of helping themselves and their neighbors.

"King Ferdinand of Rumania told us that but for the aid from America his country would have starved. Everybody in Europe will tell you the same thing. A picture of the situation in the Balkans today affords a striking contrast to the state of affairs six months ago. I need cite only the case of Rumania.

"When we came to Rumania we found women and children in the streets crying for bread; patients in hospitals praying to die. There were whole villages where the sole subsistence of the population consisted of cabbage roots, beets and grass. In the mountain regions many were dying of starvation. Children walked the streets naked. There was scarcely any clothing in the country. The Germans and Austrians had carried off everything.

"In the hospitals patients were crowded four and five in a bed, wrapped in bits of carpet. In the villages people dying of typhus had to sleep on boards, while many of the hospitals were without food, medicines or linen. Throughout the country there were serious outbreaks of typhus, pellagra and smallpox, and of every 100 infants born more then fifty died. In many places the death rate ran as high as 80 in every 100.

"Today this is changed. The poor are eating bread made from American flour. The babies are getting condensed milk from the United States. The sick are being cared for. Every destitute person in the country knows that he or she, when hungry, can apply to any of the many Red Cross canteens and get a good meal. Hundreds of thousands of articles of clothing have been distributed. Orphanages have been established, and dispensaries where the poor may receive, free of charge, medical aid have been opened. The spread of smallpox and typhus is checked. Sewing rooms are in operation where thousands of women who have lost husbands or relatives in the war are employed."

Colonel Anderson, who is now at Bucharest—his report on conditions in the Balkans was mailed to THE NEW YORK TIMES by one of his subordinates—also includes in his report the narrative of the work accomplished in Greece, Montenegro, Serbia, Albania, and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Attached to the report are official letters written by King Peter of Serbia, King Ferdinand and Queen Marie of Rumania, King Alexander of Greece, and the Governor of Albania, expressing the gratitude of the people of those countries for the aid given them by the American Red Cross.

RED CROSS FALL CAMPAIGN.

$15,000,000 to be Raised for Work at Home and Abroad.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Plans for a nation-wide Red Cross campaign opening Monday, Nov. 3, and closing Armistice Day, Nov. 11, were announced tonight by Dr. Livingston Farrand, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the American Red Cross. The primary object of the campaign, which will be known as the Third Red Cross Rollcall, will be to enroll members for 1920, but there will be in addition a general appeal for $15,000,000 to enable the organization to complete its war obligations at home and abroad. There will also be local appeals, where necessary, conducted by the chapters, to secure funds needed for local programs.

During the war there were two annual Red Cross campaigns, the War Fund Drive in the late Spring and a Christmas rollcall for membership. The only campaign this year will be the one in November and in succeeding years there will be only an annual rollcall in which the Red Cross will seek the reaffirmed allegiance of the American people expressed in dollar memberships. The money so derived will be used for American purposes and the approval thus received is to be regarded as a mandate to carry on future programs.

"The first task of the American Red Cross is, of course, to complete its obligations to American soldiers and sailors," said Dr. Farrand in announcing the program. "The organization plans, as its future policy, to concentrate its efforts upon peace problems at home, unless America should again be involved in war or confronted by great disasters creating special emergencies.

"The Red Cross programs are primarily within the field of public health and will aim particularly at co-operation with official activities, Federal State and local. The Red Cross will seek not to duplicate the work of established organizations, but will endeavor to supplement other agencies where they already exist or to stimulate and organize work where none such exists."

The home program includes preparedness for disaster relief, a widespread nursing plan, first aid instruction, and a Junior Red Cross program.

The tremendous task of the American Red Cross in the war has, however, left a continuing obligation which cannot be fulfilled for some months to come. In an amendment to the Army bill Congress has prolonged the responsibility of the Red Cross abroad by authorizing Secretary of War Baker to transfer to the Red Cross such medical and surgical supplies and supplementary and dietary foodstuffs now in Europe as are not needed by the army abroad or at home "to be used by the American Red Cross to relieve and supply the pressing needs of the countries involved in the late war."

Inventories of these supplies are now being made. To them will be added such material as the American Red Cross itself has in Europe and these will be distributed in the countries where the organization is concluding its war relief program, and where, because of the ravages of war, famine and epidemic, the distress is most pronounced, as in the Balkans, Poland and other Eastern European countries. To meet these obligations and administer this foreign relief the Red Cross must raise at this time a fund of $15,000,000, Dr. Farrand stated.

RALPH BLAKELOCK, MAD ARTIST, DIES

IN ASYLUMS SINCE 1900

$20,000 Paid for Picture He Sold for a Trifle — At 70 He Denounced Alleged Forgeries.

Ralph Albert Blakelock, the famous painter whose genius was not recognized until after the impairment of his reason put an end to his production of work of artistic excellence, died Saturday at 10:15 P. M. at the Adirondack camp of William M. Kingsley, near Elizabethtown, in Essex County, where he had been taken a month before by Mrs. Van Rensselaer Adams, his guardian.

His death was due to arterio-sclerosis, which, at his age of 72 years, it was said, made the end likely to occur at any time during the past few years. He was apparently in his usual health up to an hour before his death.

Blakelock had been in the State Hospital at Middletown, N. Y., continuously for eighteen years, with the exception of a period of liberty under guardianship from 1916 to the Fall of 1918 and the recent period of one month which ended in his death.

Because of apparent gains in his mental health, it was hoped by friends, who took an interest in him, that the painter might use his brush with his old skill when he was released from the asylum in 1916.

He returned to New York City at that time and enjoyed for the first time a personal contact with the art world which had grown, since his seclusion, to regard him as one of the foremost painters of America, but the hopes that he might again do high-grade work were disappointed.

In the Summer of 1918, while he was at Lake George, he returned to his favorite work of painting moonlight scenes and produced one or two paintings bearing a remote resemblance to the earlier canvases of this type, which had made his greatest fame.

During most of the period at the asylum the painter was protected by his delusion that he was "possessed of great wealth" from feeling any bitterness over the fact that he had received no reward of money or fame at the time when he could have enjoyed it.

The belated appreciation of his work gave him a high rank among modern painters and the sudden jumps in the art value of his works had made them a field of activity for art dealers.

The mad painter's belief that he was the richest man in the world clung to him up to this Summer, when he sent a check for $1,000,000 from the asylum to a friend in New York to compensate a small favor.

His mind cleared somewhat during his last days, Mrs. Van Rensselaer Adams said last night, but his saner grasp of things resulted to some extent in embittering his end, by enabling him for the first time to appreciate the tragedy of his life.

"He seemed to understand what his career had been," said Mrs. Adams. "The delusion that he was immensely wealthy had been taken away by persons, who, instead of humoring him in his belief that he had great riches, had told him repeatedly that he had nothing, and finally had impressed that fact upon him.

"He seemed finally to get into a resentful frame of mind, because he had had so little, while he was out in the world, creating his best work. About two weeks ago, he said to me:

"'I know now that I have no money. I painted the pictures and sold them for almost nothing. I knew then what they were worth, though no one else would admit it at the time. They always looked upon me as a poor artist.'"

Blakelock knew of the big sums which his works were selling for in recent years. Recently, Mrs. Adams said, he was given to comparing these prices, which measured present-day appreciation of his work, with the prices at which he had sold them. Mrs. Adams said that the painter had a perfect recollection of everything he had painted and was perfectly capable of establishing the authenticity of any real work of his brush, or of stamping suprious works, which for a time appeared frequently on the market, as forgeries.

During his trip to New York in 1918, he paid a visit to the office of District Attorney Swann, when a question was raised regarding a painting offered as his, and he denounced a picture which he saw there as a forgery.

Mrs. Adams said it had been asserted that persons interested in forged Blakelocks had even used influence to prevent his release from the State Hospital in order that he might not be free at any future time to take the witness stand and expose these "false Blakelocks."

In spite of his clouded mind, the old man took great delight in the honors paid him on his visits to New York, and during his last days kept saying that he wished he could come to this city again.

John G. Agar and Mrs. Adams acted as guardians for the artist, and made it possible for him to enjoy the months of freedom which had lightened the last years of his life. They started a fund in his behalf, which was augmented last year by the Y. M. C. A., when that organization discovered that one of his neglected pictures, had hung on the walls of the East Side Y. M. C. A. building for thirty-eight years.

This picture, now famous, was turned over by the painter on Nov. 1, 1880, to the institution, as security for a rent bill for quarters which he had occupied in the building. The Y. M. C. A. offered to have the picture sold and the remainder of the price used for the old man's benefit, after the satisfaction of the old claim against him. His bill, with interest at 4½ per cent. for the thirty-eight years, amounted to $763.13, and the picture, called "The Necklace," was sold for $3,000.

Blakelock was born in this city on Oct. 15, 1847. He was self-educated as a painter. He never attended an art school, and it has been said that his work "carries no suggestion of the influence of other painters."

His best known painting, "Moonlight," was sold in 1916 for $20,000, the original price paid to him for it being $500, one of the largest sums he ever received for his work. As a young man he visited the West, and some of his striking paintings are of Indians. His work received honorary mention at the Paris Exposition of 1900.

While at the State Hospital, he was elected an Associate National Academician in 1913, and a National Academician in 1916.

GREEKS WANT THRACE.

Meeting in Boston Also Asks for Epirus and Aegean Islands.

BOSTON, Aug. 10.—Resolutions declaring for the union of Thrace, Northern Epirus and the twelve islands of the Aegean Sea with Greece were adopted today at a meeting of delegates representing 126 Greek communities and fifty-six societies in the United States.

Several thousand Greeks were present. The speakers included Archbishop Rodostolou Alexander of New York, head of the Greek Church in this country. Resolutions also were adopted commending Senators Lodge, Brandegee, King and Moses for their stand in defending the cause of Greece and protesting against the statement of Senator Thomas of Colorado for delivering Thrace to Bulgaria.

Yellow Fever Grows in Ecuador.

GUAYAQUIL, Ecuador, Aug. 10.—Dispatches from Peru say that the yellow fever epidemic is growing.

FAMOUS CAMP MILLS PASSES INTO HISTORY

Existence Officially Closed, Although Some Troops Will Remain There Until Fall.

CAMP MILLS, MINEOLA, L. I., Aug. 10.—Camp Mills has officially ceased to exist, although the last of the 6,000 soldiers here awaiting demobilization will not have been sent away before Tuesday night or Wednesday morning. No more troops will be received here. According to the officers at the camp, as soon as the Government has arranged for the sale of the many buildings the camp will be abandoned. This, it is believed, will not take place before the first of October.

A number of the men of the Motor Corps and of the Quartermaster's Department, besides one battalion of the 13th Infantry, will remain here to guard property until the Government has disposed of it.

The permanent personnel of the camp is to be reduced immediately and the surplus officers sent to Camp Dix, Camp Upton, and probably Camp Merritt. The officers and men at the three flying fields, Hazelhurst, Mitchel, and Roosevelt, will also be detached and sent to various other fields until they are discharged from the service.

Camp Mills was one of the finest camps in the country, located on Hempstead Plains, between Mineola and Garden City. It consists of about 1,800 acres, and when originally taken over by the Government it was a barren waste.

DENIES CLOSING AIR FIELDS.

No Intention to Abandon Long Island Bases, Says Menoher.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Major Gen. Menoher, Director of the Army Air Service, tonight denied reports from New York that orders had been issued closing all the Long Island aviation fields and leaving only four men in charge of airplanes and motors worth many thousands of dollars.

General Menoher said emphatically that no such orders had been issued, or were in contemplation. An order recently was issued closing Camp Mills, where there was some aviation personnel, in connection with demobilization. It was suggested by General Menoher that this might have given rise to the untrue report.

POPE WON'T DISCUSS UNITY.

Reply of Pius IX. to Protestant Churches Cited in Rome.

ROME, Aug. 10, (Associated Press.)—Acta Apostolicae Bis, the official organ of the Holy See, in today's edition contains two epistles by Cardinal Patrizi, Vicar General of Pope Pius IX., written respectively in 1864 and 1865, setting forth the declarations of the Catholic Church on the proposal at the time from the Anglican Church, inviting a discussion of the union of all Christian churches.

The epistles explain that the Catholic Church, being the original church, cannot discuss a union with other churches, but that those which left her must return to her. Cardinal Patrizi's declarations are substantially the same as the explanation given by the present Pontiff to a commission of American Protestant Bishops headed by the Right Rev. Boyd Vincent, Bishop of Southern Ohio, the Right Rev. Charles P. Anderson, Bishop of Chicago, and Bishop Reginald H. Weller of the Diocese of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, when the Bishops invited the Pope to send delegates to a world conference of churches for the discussion of "questions touching faith and order."

Pope Benedict then declared that he could not permit representatives of the Catholic Church to sit in conference with other Christian bodies. He said he believed in unity of the Church, but that dissenters from the faith must first return to the mother faith, which was the Catholic faith.

FRENCH TREATY INDORSED.

American Defense Society Asks Senators to Ratify Alliance.

The special alliance negotiated by President Wilson for the protection of France was indorsed yesterday by the American Defense Society in a letter sent to every member of the Senate. The Society holds that such a treaty, in connection with a similar agreement entered into between France and Great Britain, will go far toward preserving the peace of the future. The Society expresses the belief that "Germany will labor to put herself in a position to bring on another war against France the moment she believes that she has a fair chance of winning something by new attacks." The letter has been sent to the Senators in the hope that the treaty will be immediately ratified by the Senate when it is presented to President Wilson.

The letter reads:

"The American Defense Society appreciates that throughout the war the attitude of the United States Senate toward the war and its activities has been of the highest order of patriotism. It appreciates the high-minded nonpartisanship that has characterized the course of the Senate in its support of the President and the war. As you may have observed, expressions of this Society regarding Congress and the Senate of the United States have been often expressed in terms of praise.

"The Society ventures now to express a wish. In the sincere belief that the treaty between Great Britain, the United States and France for the protection of France against Germany's next war of aggression will go far toward preserving the peace of the future we venture to express the hope that you will approve the tripartite agreement and aid its ratification at an early moment.

"We are convinced that Germany will labor to put herself in a position to bring on another war against France the moment she believes that she has a fair chance of winning something by new attacks, and will not perform under the Peace Treaty unless she be restrained by the knowledge that the United States and Great Britain will join in its enforcement against her. We believe that the best of all safeguards against Germany's next war will be found in the event of another aggressive movement on the part of Germany.

"Believing this, we beg you to take such steps as are necessary to bring about a ratification of the tripartite agreement, and to accomplish this so promptly that the celerity of your action will serve as an additional notice to Germany of the spontaneity and thoroughness of America's intentions in the matter."

The American Defense Society announced yesterday that its officers have begun a nation-wide campaign to create sentiment in favor of the universal military training bill introduced in the Senate by Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, and in the House by Representative Kahn of California.

Entertain at White Sulphur.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, Va., Aug. 10.—The Greenbrier foyer was thronged this evening for a Sunday evening concert which was one of the most successful of the Summer. Mr. Bush starts tonight for New York. Mrs. Bush and the Misses Bush and Rufus T. Bush will take the trip by motor this week, going to their home at Irvington-on-the-Hudson for a week before going to Fishers Island. Mr. and Mrs. Richardson Gibson entertained for fifteen friends. Other hosts were Mrs. P. F. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Alex P. Witty and H. Rogers Winthrop.

J. N. GOLDING DIES; WAS CITY PLANNER

He Handled the Sale of Many Fifth Avenue Lots Along Millionaires' Row.

AIDED NEW GRAND CENTRAL

Real Estate Operator One of Those Who Directed Large Improvements Before the War.

John N. Golding, founder of the real estate firm bearing his name, with offices at 9 Pine Street and 547 Fifth Avenue, died yesterday of pneumonia, at the Fifth Avenue address, in his 59th year. During the last thirty years many of the large real estate transactions in this city had passed through his hands, most notably the campaign for the purchase of added land, on which the Grand Central Terminal now stands.

Mr. Golding was born in this city, and educated at grammar schools and the Trinity School. Before he was 17 years old he went into business, making his start in dry goods. He soon shifted to real estate. As a member of Brown & Golding he managed the property controlled by the Equitable Life Assurance Society for several years.

Branching out for himself in 1890, he later acted as broker in the sale of the Plaza Hotel to the present owners, the sale of the site of the Woolworth Building, and the transfer of the property now used as the Erie Railroad Terminal in Jersey City.

He was credited with having sold a large percentage of the lots on Fifth Avenue, between Fifty-ninth and One Hundredth Streets, on which some of the finest mansions in the city were erected.

Mr. Golding was sued for divorce by his wife in 1905 but the suit did not become known until 1907. Considerable publicity was then given the suit owing to charges of cruelty preferred by Mrs. Golding. The defendant denied them.

Mrs. Golding at that time asserted that her husband was worth over $3,000,000. This he also denied. The divorce action was dropped and later a separation agreement was privately made. The disagreements over the carrying out of this led to further litigation.

Ride and Drive at Hot Springs.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Aug. 10.—Miss Alice Scarborough had a driving party today for Mrs. M. B. Schiff and Miss Jeannette Schiff, here from London. Mrs. Elliott F. The engagement has been announced of Miss Esther Kelsey, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horatio N. Kelsey of Montclair, to Charles B. Alling, an officer in the Air Service during the war. He was graduated from Yale and from the Harvard Law School, and is a son of Mrs. C. H. Alling of Montclair.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Miss Helen L. Boynton, a daughter of Colonel Charles B. Boynton and Mrs. Boynton of East Orange, N. J., to Lloyd Parker Wells, a son of Rolla Wells, twice Mayor of St. Louis. Mr. Wells was a Lieutenant in the 304th Ammunition Train overseas.

Another engagement is that of Miss Esther R. Wing, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Wing of East Orange, to Ogden Bowers Carter, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Day Carter of the same town. Mr. Carter was recently released from duty as an Ensign in the navy. He played on the baseball team at Princeton.

The engagement is announced of Miss Elizabeth Andrews of Dallas, Texas, to Major John Izard of Roanoke, Va., who was with the 60th Artillery abroad. He is now general attorney of the Connecticut Life Insurance Company in Hartford, Conn. Miss Andrews is a daughter of Mrs. Adolphus R. Andrews.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald R. Brown of Englewood, N. J., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Constance Gregory Brown, to Burnell Poole.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Baer of Mount Vernon, N. Y., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Marion Baer, to M. N. Kleban of the same town.

The engagement is announced of Miss Hortens Oliver of Long Beach, L. I., to Louis W. Herman, also of Long Beach, who is associated with the firm of Alexander Herman & Bro.

Mr. and Mrs. Max Finkelstein of 233 West 112th Street, now at Schroon Manor, Schroon Lake, announce the betrothal of their daughter, Miss Pauline M. Finkelstein, to Jack A. Frank of Boston.

MAYS TWIRLS SECOND VICTORY IN TWO STARTS FOR YANKS WITH INDIANS AS VICTIMS

INDIANS ARE DRIVEN HEADLONG BY MAYS

Yankees' Pitching Bone of Contention Puts Red Men Back on the Reservation.

ABOUT 30,000 FANS PRESENT

Great Throng Sees Huggins's Brigade Triumph by 11 to 4—Speaker Will Protest Game.

Miller Huggins served Carl Mays and his famous injunction on the Cleveland club up at the Polo Grounds yesterday afternoon and the poor Indians didn't have a chance against the legal machinery which Carl's presence with the Yankees now represents. Carl's underhand tosses were battered around considerably and his control was far from normal, but whenever the bases became stocked with Indians he simply served the old injunction on the Cleveland hitters. As a result fifteen runners were stranded on the paths waiting for hits that failed to arrive. The score was 11 to 4.

About 30,000 fans who were curious to see how an injunction acts against a suspension filled both decks of the big grand stand and a good part of the bleachers. Ban Johnson, who arrived in New York yesterday morning, had no such curiosity and he was not among those present. Those who gathered at the Brush Stadium were convinced that the suspension has little chance as against the court order.

Though Mays packed away his second victory within four days, the title to the second conquest is not completely clear at this time. Ban Johnson must review some evidence to be filed by Manager Tris Speaker of the Indians, who announced in the first inning that he would play out the game under protest. It seems to be a very weak case, but the protest will go in.

The bases were cluttered with Yankees in the opening frame when Walter Pipp smashed a line drive to left field. Fewster scored easily from third. Vick tore in from second, and Graney threw to the plate in an effort to avert the second run. It was a high and wide peg, far from the plate, and over Steve O'Neill's head. Baker went to third and Pipp to second on the throw-in, and when the ball rolled into the New York dugout Baker scored and Pipp hustled along to third. The Cleveland players protested that Pipp should have been held on second base and Baker at third, though each was entitled to one base on the hit, another on the throw-in, and a third on the overthrow. The umpires disagreed, and Manager Speaker served notice of protest on Umpire Hildebrand.

Quintet of Runs in First.

Mays was spotted a five-run lead in the first inning, and the Indians never threatened thereafter to take it away. In the fifth inning they put on a little uprising, which pushed two runs over the plate and had two more waiting, all the result of four clean hits. Huggins wigwagged to the bull pen for Ernie Shore to prepare for some emergency work, and it began to look as if Mays might be suspended by Huggins as well as by Johnson. But Carl slipped a strikeout over on Steve O'Neill when the clouds were darkest, and remained to the finish. The two Cleveland runs which arrived later did not provide any excitement, as the Yankees had picked up some extra markers in the meantime.

A small injunction to prevent Ping Bodie from dropping flies around the outfield meadow would have helped. Pingus had a very bad day. In the third inning a fly by Elmer Smith bounced out of his fins and Elmer galloped to second on the muff. In the eighth Joe Harris hit a pop fly behind short, which should have been easy for Fewster or Lewis, but Ping came tearing in with an announcement that he had it, so they let him take it. Ping dropped this one, too, but the chance was difficult and the blow went into the records as a two-bagger. In the same frame a long fly from Tris Speaker's bat went into Ping's hand and out again, Tris also getting two bases on the error.

Elmer Myers, formerly of the Mackmen, started the game for the Indians, but he did not get through the first inning. He was not hit hard, the Yanks getting only one clean single and one scratch hit during his incumbency, but these, with Myers's wildness and some loose playing by the Indians, sent four runs over and left runners on first and third bases with only one out when Speaker removed the lanky flinger. Tony Feath, late of the Malwaukee club of the American Association, replaced Myers. He went out for a pinch hitter in the eighth, after holding the Huggins force to five scratch hits and one clean single. Ed Klepfer worked the last inning and the Yanks climbed aboard his delivery for some solid hits and three runs.

Indians Miss Opportunity.

The Indians filled up the bases in the opening inning on a single and a pair of passes, but were retired without a run. The Yanks were not so easy after they filled the corners. Fewster was hit, Vick bunted safely, and when Gardner made a poor throw to first Fewster reached third and Vick second. A pass to Baker filled the bases, Lewis fanned, and Pipp followed with a solid smash to left field, the only untainted hit made by the Yankees up to the fifth inning. Fewster and Vick scored on the blow, and when Graney's throw went to the Yankee dugout Baker raced in from third and Pipp pulled up at the final turn.

Pratt was hit on the right hand and Chapman made a wild toss after grabbing Bodie's grounder. Pipp scored on the error and Pratt went around to third. At this stage Speaker declared a half holiday for Myers and called on Tony Faeth. Tony knocked down a hard smash by Ruel and got Muddy at first base, but Pratt scored on the out. The injunction papers had not been served on Tony, so he struck Mays out, ending the big inning.

Both teams specialized in leaving runners on the bases from this time up to the fifth, when the Indians broke through with a pair of runs. Chapman opened with a three-bagger off the right field wall, Speaker fouled out, and Smith singled to centre, scoring Chapman. Gardner's infield out and Wamby's infield hit put Smith on third and Johnson's single to centre chased him home.

Yankees Get More Tallies.

This rally served notice on the Yankees that it would be healthy to lay by a few more runs, so they got one back in their half of the fifth. With one out Pipp singled off Faeth's glove, took third on Pratt's single to left and counted while Bodie was forcing Pratt at second.

In New York's seventh another brace of runs was added. Lewis singled through short. Pipp sacrificed and Chapman miscued on Pratt's grounder, filling the bases. Faeth blocked Bodie's torrid thump and threw out Ping, Pipp scoring. Ruel chased Pratt home with a single past Gardner.

The Indians got a run in the eighth on Harris's scratch double, Graney's single and Speaker's long sacrifice fly to Bodie. Ping muffed the ball, but that had no effect on the scoring. In the ninth Wamby singled, was allowed to steal second and third unmolested and he scored on Jamieson's single.

With Klepfer pitching in the eighth the Yanks picked up three more runs. After Fewster had struck out, Vick doubled to left and was safe at third when Gardner muffed a throw from Klepfer on Baker's grounder. Lewis doubled to left, scoring Vick and sending Baker to third. Pipp's sacrifice fly scored Baker and Pratt's single sent Lewis across.

WHITE SOX BEAT SENATORS

Lone Run in Twelfth Gives Cicotte Victory.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Cicotte and Shaw engaged in a pitchers' duel today which Chicago won, 1 to 0, in the twelfth inning, when Weaver got an infield hit, advanced on Jackson's out and scored on Foster's wild throw of Felsch's grounder.

The game abounded in thrilling plays, a catch in short left field by Shanks of a fly from Cicotte's bat in the sixth inning as part of a double play, being the feature. Three runners were thrown out on close plays at the plate.

Curves and Bingles.

A careless fan dropped a lighted cigarette on the diamond cover which was rolled up near the right field boxes in the fifth inning. Harry Hannah, Truck No. 1 of the Yankee Fire Department, hurried to the scene with the old water pail and extinguished the blaze. Now everybody knows why they call him Truck.

Chet Thomas took up the catching burden in the eighth, and Chick Fewster, the first Yankee to bat in that inning, hit a pop foul. Chet went after the ball by way of 125th Street and it made an easy escape.

Les Nunamaker might have had a chance to do some pinch hitting in the late innings if he had not spilled so much chatter around the Cleveland bench in the fourth inning. Umps Hildebrand notified Nunny to tell his troubles to the clubhouse boy, and the big catcher went on his way.

The first inning consumed exactly thirty-five minutes. The remedy rests solely with the umpires, and unless they hurry things along faster than has been the case recently many fans will show their resentment by staying away from the games.

Huggins's men hopped into third place as a result of the victory over the Indians. The Indians moved into the same flat Saturday, but the Yanks served a dispossess notice by scoring five runs in the first inning.

Pratt made a wonderful stop on Wambsganss in the fifth inning. Del raced beyond second base, stuck out his bare hand and clutched a fast hopper. He could not recover in time to throw Wamby out at first base, but the play won him a big ovation.

Ping Bodie's catch on Speaker in the third inning was a masterpiece of outfielding. Ping atoned for the unusual catch later in the game when he allowed three flies to sift through his fingers, and at the end of the game Bodie was in bad standing with the fans.

Fewster got on the bases on each of his first four trips to the plate. He was hit, then he got a hit, and followed with two passes. On his last chance Fewster went out on strikes. When Peck is ready to resume shortstopping somebody must give way, as Fewster must be kept in the lineup every day.

Three Indians were left on the bases in the first inning, two in the second, third and fifth, three in the seventh, two in the eighth, and one in the ninth. If that isn't a season's record for a nine inning game, bring on the real record.

WHITEWASH AGAIN APPLIED TO GIANTS

Cubs Wield Brush on New Yorkers with Gusto Before 28,000 Happy Chicagoans.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—The Giants closed their second invasion of the West today with another defeat, the third in succession at the hands of the Cubs, and tonight the McGraw pennant chasers are moving eastward in no such cheerful mood as was theirs when they turned toward the setting sun, less than two weeks ago. Today's defeat was a shutout, the second suffered here and the third plastered on the New Yorkers within eight days. Grover Alexander this afternoon did what Slim Sallee did on Aug. 2 and what Claude Hendrix did only two days ago. The score was 2 to 0.

Memories of those old-time pennant fights between Giants and Cubs were revived on the North Side this afternoon. The Cubs are not going anywhere, as far as a pennant is concerned, but it always delights a Chicago crowd to see a New York team bow to the local troupe. The victories of Friday and yesterday had aroused such enthusiasm in local baseball circles that a capacity crowd turned out for the final clash of the series. The gates were closed at 2:45, while hundreds of fans were clamoring for admission. Officials of the home crowd estimated the gathering at 28,000. The stands and bleachers groaned under the weight of humanity and a few thousand stood up around the playing field, making ground rules necessary.

Benton's Mates Fall with the Ash.

Rube Benton, who had faltered at Pittsburgh and again at Cincinnati, was sent against the Cubs here this afternoon and he pitched fine ball, good enough, in fact, to win ordinarily. That same story was true about Art Nehf on Friday in the first game of the Chicago series and Phil Douglas in yesterday's game. The fault cannot be laid to the pitching, which had failed in many of the previous games of the trip. Inability of the New Yorkers to hit was the answer for this latest reverse, or perhaps it may be conversely stated as the great pitching of Grover Alexander. It has been Alex's toughest problem in the past to get by the Giants, but this afternoon he got by them just as easily as he was accustomed to get by second division clubs in the days of his greatness before the war.

McGraw's men nicked the mighty Alex for only four hits, a double by Ross Young, and singles by Young, Baird and Snyder. The hits were far apart, as the score indicates. He handed out three passes, but he more than offset his lack of control by an ability to tighten up with runners on bases. Alexander fanned seven men, showing that he still carries much of the old-time zip on his fast ball.

Benton was great after that first inning, but unfortunately Rube's stellar flinging in the succeeding frames failed to erase that one mighty thump which Dave Robertson turned in against him in the opener. Herzog and Merkle had been quite active in the first two games of the set, while Robertson had filled a rather passive rôle. Today Dave had his opportunity to smile at his success against the team which recently let him out. It was his circuit clout that accounted for the two runs scored against Benton.

That Robertson fanned on two later occasions means little now. He delivered at one critical moment, and a ball game rode on his hit. Flack and Hollocher had been retired in order in the home half of the first inning, when Charley Herzog worked Benton for a pass. Herzog promptly stole second, so as to be in position to score on a hit, but the exertion was not necessary. Robertson delivered one of his powerful punches and the ball sailed far above Ross Young's head and over the right field wall for the circuit. Herzog jogged home ahead of Robertson, and the scoring ended for the afternoon. After this clout Benton went on his way easily, and the Cubs got only three singles.

Great Catch by Robertson.

In the fourth inning Robertson again had a chance to smile. He took a hit away from Hal Chase with a remarkable running catch, the fielding gem of the game. Then he toed the plate in the home half of the same inning and struck out on three pitched balls.

In the sixth the Giants missed a fine opportunity to score and the Cubs did the same. With one out Ross got two bases on a fly that eluded Herzog, Young doing some fine sprinting to reach second. Fletcher fanned for the second out, Chase drew a pass, and Kauff toed the plate. Benny tried hard, but Herzog made a fine catch of his hot drive and the opportunity had faded away.

In Chicago's half of the sixth Flack walked and stole, and reached third while Zim was throwing out Hollocher on the latter's sacrifice. Herzog was hit by a pitched ball and stole second. Again Robertson went out on strikes, and then Fletcher made a fancy catch of Merkle's hard smash.

Runs Are Plentiful, Toronto Taking First, 11 to 9, and Newark Winning Second, 8 to 3.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 10.—Newark fans saw a shower of base hits and a blizzard of runs here today in the double-header with Toronto.

The first game went Toronto's way, with the score 11 to 9. Newark outbatted the visitors, mauling three twirlers for seventeen hits to Toronto's fourteen. In the second game Stryker pitched a steady contest, while Peterson, who started for the visitors, was wild and had to be taken out. Newark made eight runs in this game, while Toronto stopped at three tallies. Bruggy, Newark's catcher, and Dowd, Newark's shortstop, were banished in the first game for objecting to decisions.

Joe Letter followed up his five hits of Saturday with seven more bingles in the two games today.

SKEETERS WIN TWO GAMES.

Rochester Loses First, 3 to 1, and Second, 7 to 5.

After getting away with the big end of the series against the Newark Bears, Arthur Irwin's baseball outfit from Rochester ran up against a snag in its change in territory in the form of a double defeat which was handed out by Bill Donovan's Skeeters yesterday at Jersey City. Jersey City won the first game 3 to 1, and the second 7 to 5.

In the opening number Al Schacht, for the Skeeters, piloted his associates to victory by an excellent performance on the pitching block. He held the Colts to six hits, while Jersey City touched Clifford for eight bingles. Rochester's only count was the result of a base on balls to Kelly in the second frame, followed by a sacrifice and a scratch hit by O'Neil.

In the closing contest Rochester got off in front, but Jersey City forged ahead in the fifth, and then clinched it with a fine streak of batting against Brogan's delivery.

PIRATES TOO MUCH FOR THE DODGERS

Brooklyn's First Local Appearance After Western Trip Not a Success—Score, 5 to 3.

Skipper Bezdek and his Pirate crew sailed into the Flatbush ball tossers yesterday afternoon at the Ebbets battle ground and won the contest, 5 to 3. It was the first appearance on the home field of Uncle Robbie's pets since they took their westward journey, where they won six and lost five of the games played. The last two encounters on the road were with the Pirates at Pittsburgh, Friday and Saturday. Each team won one game via the shutout route. The Dodgers will have to win today's game from the Buccaneers in order to break even, as the Pirates turn North to Boston for a series. The game was played before 8,000 fans.

Adams did not look very good at the start of the game, and during the opening innings it appeared that the Brooklyn team relished his offerings. But after the second inning he was not as generous, and the Flatbush score of two runs remained stagnant until the ninth inning, when another tally was slipped across on a wild throw.

Bezdek and Klem Argue.

Bezdek and his black-legged cohorts tried to convince Umpire Klem that he should stay home from the picture show for a couple of evenings and spend his time learning the rules. He differed with them, however, saying that he knew the rules quite well enough to be able to have them all saving shoe leather by holding down the Pirate bench for a little siesta during the remainder of the afternoon if they would not go back to ball chasing. The argument resulted from an action of Manager Robinson in the sixth inning. Jimmy Johnston had singled sharply through third, and had gone to second when Cutshaw threw out Griffith. Zach Wheat lined a low, hard-hit ball to Cutshaw, Johnston racing to third with the crack of the bat. Then Jimmy, believing that the drive was caught on the fly, and that he had been the dupe of a double play, was about to walk off the field, when Robinson reached out and grabbed him. He firmly planted his keystone guardian back on third, as he had seen Cutshaw scoop the ball out of the dirt.

Bezdek said that if a base-runner is touched by a man on the coaching line, the base-runner is out. This rule was enforced against the Pirates on the opening day this season, and Bezdek bitterly remembered it. But Klem said Johnston was safe, and safe he remained. But it was of no avail, as Hy Myers, who followed him, was thrown out by Terry, ending the inning.

The Pirates began to pick up runs in the first inning. They plucked the first one when Bigbee singled through short, romped to second when "Scoops" Carey laid down a pretty bunt, and scored on Southworth's single to right. But the Dodgers where not to be outdone by the Smoky City visitors, and they opened their return to the home field with a single tally. Olson reached first on a single to short, stole second, went to third on Jimmy Johnston's sacrifice, and scored when Zach Wheat hit a single to left.

Another Run for Robins.

The Dodgers scored another run in the second when Konetchy tripled to the right garden and scored when Terry threw out Ward. And then the Dodgers took a vacation as far as earning runs was concerned. In the ninth they made one more when Konetchy doubled and was allowed to come home when Adams threw the ball into the Pirate dugout.

But Pittsburgh grew more proficient in gathering runs. In the fourth two more tallies were stowed away, and in the fifth and seventh one apiece was scored. Mitchell replaced Cadore in the ninth inning and he was touched for two hits during his brief visit to the mound.

The Pirates made a total of thirteen hits off the combined efforts of Cadore and Mitchell. Max Carey was in the limelight when he took a turn with his black stick. Carey made four singles in five trips to the plate, and crossed the plate with a Pittsburgh tally in the fifth. Southworth was close on Carey's heels, as he lined out two singles and a double in five times at bat.

Fritz Mollwitz guarded the initial station with his six-foot two-inch frame. By playing in yesterday's game he completed his forty-third game at first, having divided the season at first equally with Saier, who recently retired from baseball. Mollwitz will probably continue at first for the remainder of the season. Adams won his twelfth game this season by beating the Flatbush nine. He has lost seven, which puts him at the top of the Pirate pitchers.

Lafayette Henion, a right-hand pitcher who has been making them open their mouths while pitching for the Moose Jaw club of the Western Canada League, will report in a short time to the Dodgers. Upon the recommendation of Manager Charles Moll of the Winnipeg club of the same league, the Brooklyn club purchased Henion's release.

DISCUSS MAYS CASE TODAY.

Owners of Three Clubs to Meet—Ban Johnson Reaches New York.

The lining up of the rival forces in the fight occasioned by Ban Johnson's suspension of Pitcher Carl Mays is scheduled to get under way today. The meeting, called for this morning at the Biltmore Hotel by the owners of the Yankees, will be held despite the refusal of five clubs owners to attend. Their decision to stick with President Johnson will have no effect on the plan of Colonels Ruppert and Huston to carry the fight to the bitter end.

The New York, Chicago and Boston clubs, the three most powerful clubs of the American League, will be represented at the meeting this morning. Owner Harry H. Frazee of the Red Sox will attend, as will Charles A. Comiskey, owner of the White Sox, and long regarded as the leading figure among the American League club owners. The owners of the Cleveland, Detroit and St. Louis clubs—all of which dickered with the Boston club for the release of Mays—remain with the Johnson faction. Washington and Philadelphia, the weak members of the organization, also are with Johnson, despite the fact that Clark Griffith battled the American League boss last season at the memorable Cleveland meeting, and Connie Mack carried one of his cases into court on injunction proceedings.

Johnson arrived in New York yesterday morning from Chicago. Big Ban usually travels over the Grand Central, but this time he arrived at the Pennsylvania Station. One of the employes of the New York American League club was waiting on the station platform, and as soon as Johnson made his appearance he was served with papers in the injunction proceedings. He left New York last week before the papers were ready, hence he was not served until yesterday.

The American League President will not attend the Biltmore meeting this morning, but he will be in court tomorrow when the hearing is held on the injunction to restrain him from interfering with the Yankees' use of Carl Mays for the remainder of the season. The owners of the New York club hope to have the restraining order made permanent, and Johnson will be in court with his attorneys to fight any such action.

REDS WIN IN THIRTEENTH.

Wild Pitch by Meadows Allows Daubert to Count—Score, 3 to 2.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 10.—Cincinnati won a well-played thirteen-inning game from Philadelphia before 22,000 people today by the score of 3 to 2. With one out in the thirteenth, Meadows made a wild pitch with a runner on second, allowing the winning run to score. Both Ring and Meadows had one bad inning, but otherwise pitched wonderful ball.

The Cincinnati team scored two runs in the fourth on a pass to Groh, a double by Roush, Kopf's sacrifice fly, and a single by Magee. The Phillies tied it in the fifth on Callahan's triple, Tragesser's double, a sacrifice by Meadows, a walk to Bancroft, and a double steal.

In the last half of the thirteenth, with one out, Daubert hit safely to left and went to second when Callahan fumbled the ball. With Groh at bat, Meadows made a very wild pitch, which hit the ground in front of the plate and bounded into the crowd, allowing Daubert to score from second base under the ground rule in force. AUSTRALIANS WIN SWIMS.

Misses Durack and Wylie Take Two Events at Chicago Meet.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—Misses Fanny Durack and Wilhelmina Wylie, Australian swimming stars who yesterday refused to enter competitive events, today won two of the five events for women, and Miss Betty Grimes, Minneapolis A. C., won the National A. A. U. senior women's high diving championship. Today's program closed the second annual public water carnival of the Chicago Athletic Association.

The Australian swimmers, who are on tour of the United States and Canada, understood their agreements permitted them to appear in exhibition and handicap events only. A telegram received today from Frederick W. Rubien, Secretary of the National A. A. U., informed them, however, that they must take part in competitive events.

Miss Wylie won the 100-yard breast stroke swim from Miss Helen Thompsen of the Milwaukee A. C. by the narrow margin of two feet. Miss Durack won the 400-yard free style by fifty feet from Miss Thelma Darby of Indianapolis, after the latter had pushed her for 300 yards.

FIRE AT PRINCETON FIELD.

Grand Stand and Several Sections of Bleachers Destroyed.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 10.—Fire of unknown origin broke out today at Osborn Field, the scene of Princeton track meets and baseball games, and before it could be brought under control had completely destroyed the grand stand, the press stand and several sections of the bleachers with adjoining property. The loss is estimated at $12,000.

BENNETT IS STAR IN BRONX GAMES

Leads St. Anselm's Athletes to Victory in Meet at Macombs Dam Park.

Lloyd Bennett, a new member of the St. Anselm's A. C., led his team to victory yesterday in the Bronx Athletic League's handicap track and field meet at Macomb's Dam Park. Bennett registered a brace of victories, while his teammates chalked up four additional successes, giving the St. Anselm's A. C. representatives a total of six victories in a program of eight events on track and field. This showing gave the club a margin of eighteen points in the team prize struggle, the score being 38 for St. Anselm's A. C. against 22 for the Pastime A. C., which finished second.

Bennett's two victories surprised the onlookers. He captured the 1,000-yard race and the quarter-mile run, in both of which he scored over capable rivals.

Louis Labowitz, of the Pastime A. C., local three-mile walk champion, failed to redeem sealed handicaps in a one mile walk. This race went to James Farrell of the Bronx Church House, whose handicap was found to be 1 minute. Labowitz, from scratch, finished third.

The summaries:

100-yard dash; handicap—Won by M. Cohen, Mohawk A. C. (4 yards); W. Natter, Mohawk A. C. (6 yards), second; S. Piermont, Pastime A. C. (6 yards), third; H. P. Koepke, Mohawk A. C. (6 yards), fourth. Time—0:10 1-5.

1,000-yard run; handicap—Won by Lloyd Bennett, St. Anselm's A. C. (40 yards); C. Beagen, St. Anselm's A. C. (12 yards), second; Kyron Hearns, Pastime A. C. (30 yards), third; Willis Deagan, St. Anselm's A. C. (28 yards,) fourth. Time—2:24 2-5.

One mile walk; sealed handicap—Won by James K. Farrell, Bronx Church House (1 min.); W. Radey, Pastime A. C. (1 min). second; Louis Labowitz, Pastime A. C. (scratch), third; Joseph Aronson, Pastime A. C. (10 sec.,) fourth. Time—7:27.

Two-mile run; handicap—Won by M. Russo, St. Anselm's A. C. (190 yards); James Brooks, Mohawk A. C. (175 yards), second; Chick Lauth, St. Anselm's A. C. (200 yards,) third; C. Philipson, Pastime (250 yards,) fourth. Time—9:52.

C., (10 feet,) with 51 feet 1 inch, second; John O'Leary, St. Anselm's A. C., (12 feet,) with 50 feet 10½ inches, third; W. Netter, Mohawk A. C., (14 feet,) with 50 feet 10 inches, fourth.

Running High Jump, Handicap.—Won by John O'Leary, St. Anselm's A. C., (5 inches,) with 5 feet 9 inches; E. Benzinger, St. Anselm's A. C., (scratch,) with 5 feet 8 inches, second; H. Stone, Pennant A. C., (4 inches,) with 5 feet 8 inches, third; W. Smith, St. Anselm's A. C., (8 inches,) with 5 feet 8 inches, fourth. Three last athletes were tied for second place, but were awarded positions on the rating of the handicaps.

One and Seven-eighths Mile Relay Race, Handicap.—Won by St. Anselm's A. C., (second team,) with W. Hannon, F. Bennett, A. Bennett, J. Loegar, (75 yards;) Pastime A. C., with L. Hordes, W. Steers, F. Egan and K. Hearns, (101 yards,) second; St. Anselm's A. C., (first team,) with J. O'Connor, M. Shea, C. Beagan and W. Deagan, (14 yards,) third. Time—8:12.

Point Score.—St. Anselm's A. C., 38; Pastime A. C., 22; Mohawk A. C., 20; Bronx Church House, 5; Pennant A. C., 2.

VRETTOS IS TRIPLE VICTOR.

Wins Jump, Discus, and Weight Events at Greek-American Meet.

With three victories to his credit in a program of seven events, C. Vrettos, junior metropolitan shotput champion, carried off the chief laurels yesterday in the annual handicap track and field meet of the Greek-American A. C., at Midland Park, Grant City, S. I.

Vrettos captured the 12-pound stone throw, the running broad jump, and the discus throw, taking the stone and discus events from scratch. In the jumping competition he was aided by a handicap of 3 feet, and had an actual jump of 17 feet 4 inches. The local title-holder competed from scratch in the shotput, but had to be content with second place to Teddy Matsukes, who was allotted 3½ feet.

The summaries:

100-Yard Dash; Handicap—Won by V. Woulas, (6 yards;) C. Sardella, (5 yards,) second; J. Govas, (5 yards,) third. Time—0:11.

880-Yard Run; Handicap.—Won by M. Nicas, (scratch;) T. Gourcos, (50 yards,) second; M. Pappas, (15 yards,) third. Time—2:24.

SCRATCH MEN ARE BEATEN.

Handicaps Defeat Morse and White in Salem-Crescent Games.

Scratch competitors fared badly yesterday in the Salem-Crescent A. C. handicap games at Macombs Dam Park. Roy Morse and Pete White, the club's star sprinters, failed in the 100 and 220-yard dashes, respectively, and had to be content with second laurels to handicapped rivals. The century resulted in a victory for Howard Reed, while W. Stevenson took the furlong dash.

The summaries:

880-Yard Run, handicap.—Won by C. Hicks, (50 yards;) A. Atancel, (30 yards,) second; H. Johnson, (25 yards,) third; T. Ellison, (16 yards,) fourth. Time—2:13 1-5.

VICTORIOUS AMERICAN ATHLETES RETURN ON IMPERATOR

AMERICAN ATHLETES BACK WITH LAURELS

Victors in Interallied Games Return on Imperator with Bales of Prizes.

BIG MEET IS ABANDONED

Men Not In Condition for Welcoming Event Planned—Some to Enter for National Titles.

The giant steamship Imperator swung and nestled into a Hoboken pier yesterday morning with a most precious cargo. Uncle Sam's stalwart athlete-soldiers, the men who upheld the athletic prestige of the United States so commendably in the recent Interallied games, held at Joinville-le-Pont, France, returned to their homeland.

Confusion in the time of arrival of the huge liner interfered with the plans of welcome to the home-coming heroes. There were no Amateur Athletic Union officials at the pier because it had been announced from the War Department previously that the ship would not dock until 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Captain Prather and Major Clarence J. Griffith of the War Department's Commission on Training Camp Activities, were on hand, having been notified correctly of the arrival of the ship with its galaxy of star athletes. The complement of returning athletes was thirty-six officers in the service, three enlisted men, and thirty-nine civilians, the latter part of the division that sailed from here June 4 to augment the athletes serving abroad.

One and all, they were happy to glimpse again the Statue of Liberty and to get their feet upon these shores. The general feeling of joy was intensified later when the team repaired to the Hotel Astor, stowed away a substantial luncheon, provided for railroad transportation to their homes, and then went touring the town in a sightseeing bus which took them to every point of vantage on Manhattan Island, from the Battery to Grant's Tomb. After the tour the athletes had dinner at the Astor.

Colonel Thompson Heads Coterie.

Colonel Joseph H. Thompson of the 110th Infantry, 28th Division, winner of the coveted Croix de Guerre and the possessor of four wound stripes for his activities on the Vesle and Argonne fronts, was serenely contend not only because he was home again but also because of the great showing made by the men he chaperoned across the briny deep on the trip that started June 4. Colonel Thompson acted as the representative of General Pershing in bringing the athletes to France and in the same capacity taking them home.

"What can I say of the games that has not already been said?" said Colonel Thompson when asked to speak of the gigantic soldier meet. It was wonderful the greatest thing ever, and I don't think is equal will be witnessed again in a lifetime. The Olympic games are the world's biggest athletic attractions, but they were overshadowed by the Interallied games. You have no conception of the huge crowds who turned out to witness the sports and the great throngs of athletes who participated.

America's victory left no room for doubt. It had been expected, but it came with even more decisiveness than even the most optimistic admirer of Uncle Sam's team had visioned. There was absolutely nothing to measure up with us on track and field, and it was in this branch of the competition that our wonderful success came. But the meet was wonderful, the greatest thing that could be imagined; an affair that only a Government could successfully conduct, and the United States surely put this over."

Some of the athletes who returned were:

Lieutenant Charles Paddock, University of Southern California; Sol Butler, Dubuque College; Charles Carroll, University of Illinois; Marshall Haddock, University of Kansas; Lieutenant William Moore, Harvard; Private H. T. Torkelson, Exeter Academy; Tom Campbell, University of Chicago; Lieutenant Edward Meehan, Notre Dame University; Lieutenant C. J. Stout, University of Chicago; James Henigan, Dorchester Club, Boston; Charles Hammond, University of the South; Lieutenant Fred W. Kelly, New York A. C.; William Sylvester, University of Missouri; Lieutenant Robert Simpson, Chicago; R. L. Templeton, Stanford University; Lieutenant Clinton Larsen, Brigham Young University; Lieutenant William H. Taylor, Woodfield, Ohio; Lieutenant Massapust, Camp Dodge; Lieutenant J. B. Southerland, Pittsburgh A. A.; Edgar A. Caughey, Stanford University; George Bronder, Jr., New York A. C.; Lieutenant Norman Ross, Illinois A. C.; Sergeant Charles Montgomery, Pittsburgh A. A.; Carl Lilljekult, Bronx Church House, and Sergeant Paul Prehn, Camp Dodge, Iowa.

MURRAY BEATS PATTERSON.

National Tennis Champion Wins Informal Match at Newport, 6—2, 3—6, 6—3.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 10.—Robert Lindley Murray, national tennis champion, and Gerald L. Patterson, All-England titleholder, played an impromptu match on the clubhouse court at the Casino this morning, the American winning two of the three sets. The scores were, 6-2, 3—6, 6—3.

The match proved nothing in particular, as the English champion did not appear to be going at top speed during all the sets. The same might be said of Murray. This was evidently due to the fact that each regarded the affair as strictly informal competition. Patterson showed enough, however, to lead to the belief that he will be a strong contender in the national championship matches soon to be held. He possesses a severe service and showed especial skill in overhead killings.

The lone volleying of the foreigner went from the brilliant to the erratic, and his ground strokes left much to be desired at times. At the same time the impression always prevailed that his faults were those of carelessness in this particular match rather than any chronic ailment.

A total of 26 games were played in the three sets, Murray winning 15, with a total of 83 points, while Patterson scored 77 points in winning 11 games. Patterson had 37 placement aces, against 12 by Murray, but this fine work was off-set by errors of the Australian.

FRANCIS OUIMET TAKEN ILL.

Plays Record Golf and Then Succumbs to Tonsilitis.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Aug. 10.—Francis Ouimet, who was scheduled to play in a golf foursome here this afternoon, was suddenly taken ill with tonsilitis and tonight is under a physician's care. He was entered in the amateur championship tournament at Pittsburgh, which begins on Saturday.

Ouimet played this morning and equaled the course record of 69, made by Brady and Fotheringham. Jess Guilford and Vincent Hilton defeated Grantland Rice and T. C. Colkett this afternoon, 4 and 3.

Boyd Beats Raine on Flushing Links

R. H. Boyd defeated G. D. Raine in the semi-final round for the President's Trophy on the links of the Flushing Country Club yesterday by 2 up and 1 to play. The winner will meet Jack de Chadenedes in the final next week.

Comments On Current Events in Sport

An Unfortunate Controversy.

What's the matter with the men who run baseball? They have always had an unhappy faculty of failing to get the public point of view, but never has there been such an inopportune time for kicking up a fuss in the national game as the present. With a country-wide revival in baseball and with a steaming hot contest in each of the leagues, diplomacy and consistency have been cast aside and the American League, in particular, has become embroiled in a mix-up of petty politics which is likely to result in a serious setback for the game.

The Carl Mays case is stirring up more bitter feeling among the club owners every day. When Ban Johnson refused to lift the suspension of Mays, he suggested that he call a special meeting of the league and have the New York owners present their case. The Yankees turned down this offer. Now the Yankees have invited the club owners for a special meeting here today and the five clubs which Johnson has lined up refused to attend. So there you are!

With organized ball already branded as infringing the Sherman Anti-trust Act, and facing punitive damages of $240,000, the game is once more dragged into the courts before the appeal on this big damage suit is heard. The air is full of talk of boycott, strikes, and this and that, just at a time when the mind of the baseball public should be free to concentrate on the pennant races, which are galloping along at such a terrific rate in the two leagues.

In the National League, the pennant issue has become clouded because the Western clubs have begun bowling that New York is trying to buy up the whole baseball market. Cincinnati, with a chance for the flag for the first time in its history, is heaping abuse on Manager McGraw, the same McGraw who handed the Reds Pat Moran, the best manager they have ever had, on a silver platter.

When the game is drawing more people at the turnstiles of all the major league parks than ever before, it would seem that cooler heads on the shoulders of the baseball officials, a little more diplomacy, less jealousy and an open-and-above-board policy would be in order. Professional sport can not be handled too carefully. It is easily brought into disrepute.

It would seem that one of the duties of a highly paid official like Ban Johnson should be to cement good feeling and promote harmony among the club owners instead of lining them up for a needless scrap.

The Yankees appear to have rights in the Mays case which Johnson and the five clubs behind him purposely overlook. Johnson never did like New York and has never used his influence to promote American League popularity in this city. He has always tried to promote an intersectional feeling in favor of the West. New York's action in standing on its rights constitutes the first instance in which Johnson has been seriously opposed. Some cool head should step in and control this baseball conflagration before it gets beyond control.

Newport's Tennis Week.

Tennis week at Newport is a unique institution in the American athletic and social calendar. So far as the pictures on the setting, the crowds, the clothes and the entertainments are concerned, one sees little variation between the modern invitation tournaments at the Casino and the old days of the national championships.

The people come to see "the tennis," and it makes no difference to them what titles are at stake or what reputations in the balance. "Who is playing?" was a common question in the grandstand last week, even on Saturday, when those Titans of the racquet, William T. Tilden, 2d, and William M. Johnston, had reached the final round. "The tennis" at Newport is merely an excuse for a social gathering like the horse show, the dog show and the beach. Yet Newport thoroughly appreciates its annual tennis tournament if only from the social side and it lavishly entertains the players who have supplied the material for a whole week's conversation.

It may be doubted whether any group of athletes had a better time than did the aristocrats of the racquet last week. With the daily round of luncheons, swimming parties, teas, bridge, dinners and dances, there was not a dull or a dry moment in all those six days of pleasant luxury.

As for the tournament itself, it was conducted with remarkable efficiency and the most scrupulous attention to detail, and for this smoothly working machinery the greatest credit is due to Craig Biddle, the tireless Chairman of the local committee, himself a devoted follower of the courts and a sportsman of the broadest sympathies. He was assisted in his task by a group of unselfish and sincerely enthusiastic co-workers, with the result that no executive blunders or breaches of tact were possible. The entire tournament was a triumph of able individual and collective directing.

Under the circumstances, there is fully sure to be a revival of the old agitation in favor of returning the national championship to Newport, where it was held from 1881 to 1891 inclusive, with never a thought of change. But whenever the suggestion crops up again, the inevitable answer must be "the gallery" at Forest Hills, where, since the Davis Cup matches of 1914, the tennis fans have been accustomed to gather in full force whenever an event of national importance was staged.

The West Side Club is accessible to them, and the blue ribbon tennis event of the season thus becomes not merely a social function, but an athletic competition of primary importance. It would be unfair to deprive these thousands of real and understanding followers of tennis of the chance to see their favorite game at its highest point of development, and it is equally unfair to ask the stars of the courts to compete for the national championships under circumstances which cannot be conducive to top form. It is useless to ask the Newport boxholders to stop talking or walking about during a match, as Messrs. Biddle and Conlin were repeatedly forced to do last week. The gallery simply refuses to take the tennis seriously unless it is of such overwhelming brilliancy that concentrated attention is practically forced upon it.

The crowd behaved beautifully on Saturday for Tilden and Johnston, partly because of the quality of the exhibition and partly because it was the final match. But Tilden's equally brilliant performances on successive days against Washburn and Williams were practically wasted so far as the general onlookers were concerned.

There is no need of drawing odious comparisons when the facts are obvious. Let Newport continue to hold its unique invitation tournaments as long as its hospitality and interest may continue. The tennis players certainly enjoy Newport, and Newport seems to enjoy the tennis players. But let national championships be decided where contestants and spectators alike may gather with the single idea of seeing that the best man wins.

Yearling Prices and Racing.

Probably nothing that has happened in racing this season so well demonstrates the prosperity of the sport and indicates the confidence which important horse owners with large investments have in its future, as the prices realized in the sales of yearlings at Saratoga. Higher figures have been reached than at any time since racing was resumed, in this State. This applies not only to individual sales in which a new record for recent years has been made, but also to the average of prices for all sales.

Two sales conducted at Saratoga last week brought totals of $143,000 and $67,000 and another for $22,000, both figproportion. One colt was sold for $25,000 and another for $22,000. Both figures being far in excess of the best price paid for a yearling last season. Golden Broom, which has just developed into a sensational two-year-old, was the highest priced yearling at Saratoga in 1918 and sold for $15,000. With prices soaring, more young horses are being marketed than usual.

Perhaps the most impressive feature of the sales so far, as it reflects upon the prosperity of the sport and the confidence of the men behind it, is the spirited bidding among the wealthy owners. It is evident that, now the war is over, these men have set out to rebuild stables which have become depleted and run down, and to bring new blood into stocks of racers. Whereas the bidding at the sales is usually conducted in units of hundreds, thousands have been the rule. Such men as J. K. L. Ross, W. R. Coe, Wilfred Viau, and W. S. Kilmer have opposed each other in the auction paddock when some particularly desirous yearling was being offered, and have practically recognized no limit.

They have made this a very good year for the breeders of thoroughbreds and have no doubt given much encouragement to the industry. But in the end the owners of racers and the public which patronizes and supports the sport will share in the benefits. More and perhaps better horses will be seen at the tracks and better racing may be expected.

Yearlings are always to be regarded as a doubtful investment and the high prices paid for them this season involve something of a sporting chance. But the owners of big racing stables have found their encouragement in the support which the public has given racing and the larger purses offered by all of the associations.

The Golf Tourney at Oakmont.

Saturday of this week will see the preliminary qualifying round of what should be the finest national amateur golf championship ever held in this country. Not only are all the older favorites entered, but a host of youngsters have forged to the front in the quiet period of the sport since war killed competitive play. A bold guesser might pick two out of four semi-finalists, but not even a fortune-teller could risk his reputation by hazarding an opinion on the final result. A fair field and no favor is what lies before each contestant, and the best man of the field that is entered at Oakmont will be a worthy champion indeed.

Golf has this advantage over other sports—there are more former champions entered in annual title tilts for the same honor than in almost any other branch of athletics that could be mentioned off hand. This is because years of play do not make such a difference in the royal and ancient game as they do in sports that require more fleetness of foot or strength of muscle. McLoughlin, the comet of the courts but a few short years ago, has slowed down out of championship form, but the same Jerry Travers who was national amateur champion when Bill Larned was national tennis champion back in 1907 is headed for the Oakmont links with every prospect of wielding a wicked midiron in the battle for the title. The golf champions of a decade ago are entered at Pittsburgh, but the leaders of other sports of ten and fifteen years back are buried in the oblivion that is the final end.

Therefore the meeting of former national titleholders at Oakmont will be all the more interesting in that it will be a situation particularly appropriate to the game of the links. Here Travers will meet Eben Byers, another former champion, with whom he crossed niblicks twelve years ago in Cleveland in the national title event. Chick Evans, present national amateur champion, will defend his title against the assaults of W. C. Fownes, playing over his home course, and Fownes will have the memory of his victory over this same Chick Evans nine years ago at Brookline. Bob Gardner, winner in 1906 and 1915, may meet both H. Chandler Egan and John Anderson, the defeated finalists in his former triumphs, and Francis Ouimet may be welcomed back to the national event by the host of ex-champions he defeated at Ekwanok in 1914 in winning the amateur title.

And so it goes—former champions on every hand, with a present titleholder, one Charles Evans, Jr., of Edgewater, who is not the slightest bit inclined politely to hand over his crown and sceptre to another. The quality of the field and play will undoubtedly put golf in high favor again in this country. When the laurel wreath is placed upon the survivor of such a field, the honor will be doubly earned and highly deserved.

The Outlook in Football.

Preparations for the coming football season have already started at some of the colleges and the gridiron candidates at all the institutions will be called together for preliminary observation by the end of the month. By the end of September football will come into its own again. The game slumbered during the war, and there was no effort to develop the highly specialized elevens of the pre-war days. The game will be taken up this season with new interest and the gridiron inactivity of the last few seasons will undoubtedly prove beneficial.

For one thing, there will be more football candidates at all the colleges than formerly because the game was widely played in the army, navy and in the cantonments. When the colleges went under military training students who never even cared to witness a football game were coaxed into real competition. The student camps, the army camps, and the naval stations developed many high class players, who will be back in college molestins this Fall. The ruling at Harvard, Yale and Princeton to permit the holders of emergency war degrees to return to college to pursue their studies for the regular academic degrees will mean that many players of two and three seasons ago will return next month and have the privilege of another season of intercollegiate competition.

There has been a shake-up in the coaching supervision at Harvard, Yale, and Princeton. Yale will have Doc Sharpe, the old Cornell coach, while Bob Fisher will succeed Percy Haughton at Harvard. Bill Roper will take Speedy Rush's place at Princeton and Rush will take Sharpe's place at Ithaca. Larry Bankart will return to Colgate, Bob Folwell will be back at Penn, Ed Robinson will again be in charge at Brown, and Fred Dawson at Columbia.

Some of the college faculties have advocated the elimination of many of the evils which crept into the game in its most prosperous days. Extravagance and other objectionable features have been frowned on, but nevertheless the big games of the coming Fall will be the same inspiring athletic spectacles of the pre-war days. Football will be more popular than ever, and while it may be a season or more before the great elevens of the past will be equaled, the game will come back next month with a real smash of enthusiasm.

New York's New Track.

The New York A. C. is going to step into the breach and supply this city with a track which will be acceptable for important athletic meets, national A. A. U. championships, and try-outs for international competitions of the future. Construction work has already begun on the New York A. C. Travers Island property, where about four and three-quarters acres of ground, at present under water, will be reclaimed and modeled into a suitable scene for extensive athletic competition. A quarter-mile running track, a 220-yard straightaway, and every other modern improvement will give New Yorkers at last a realization of a long-indulged ambition—to conduct other than district championships on the outdoor track and field. The work of laying out a track will be completed by next Spring, under present plans, and it is possible, too, that the construction of a stand with extensive seating accommodations will also be finished by that time.

The need for a practical and useful athletic field in New York has long been a topic for lengthy discussion in local athletic circles and was strikingly brought home recently with the announcement of the proposed homecoming athletic meet for Uncle Sam's returning soldier athletes, whose successes abroad in the Interallied games are still fresh in memory. It was at first proposed to conduct the meet at Brooklyn Athletic Field, but subsequent confusion in the sailing date of the athletes caused an abandonment of the project, temporarily at least. It is doubtful if the games would have proved successful on the Brooklyn field, for the officials, because of the restricted size of the field, would have been compelled to decrease the program by eliminating three field events. One official frankly declared that if Pat Ryan threw the hammer in Brooklyn Athletic Field somebody would be hit with the leaden ball and a fatality would result. The same is true of the javelin and discus, this official said.

With its attractive facilities, Weequahic Park, Newark, N. J., stands out alone just now as the most acceptable place in the metropolitan district for important outdoor athletic meets. This park, built on extensive lines especially for important athletic meets, has accomodations for a crowd of 15,000 and parking space for 500 automobiles. Its facilities have gained it recognition as one of the most complete athletic centres existent. Efforts to secure a similar plant for this city have been made for years, but the local officials have got no further now than they were when the project was first launched. It is admitted that with a similar field in this city important athletic meets would be awarded to New York and tryouts for future Olympic games could be conducted. Under present conditions there can be no thought of important activity by promoters in track and field athletics.

Macomb's Dam Park is declared absolutely inadequate, likewise City College stadium, and also Celtic Park, which has deteriorated beyond recovery as far as outdoor championships and tryouts for international competitions are concerned. Of the three tracks, Macomb's Dam Park is the most acceptable. This was transformed from a marsh land into an athletic centre by Frederick W. Rubien in 1905. It resulted in a boom in athletics in the Bronx and furnished an outlet for activities by others of the so-called smaller clubs of the city. In its present condition, however, the park is unworthy of mention in the same breath with national championships. A straightaway for sprinting, hurdles for the timber toppers, and equipment for meets above the ordinary are all conspicuous by their absence.

In striking contrast to this lack of athletic facilities here is the condition existing among our neighbors across the Hudson River. Newark, with its Weequahic Park track, is ready at all times to entertain important athletic gatherings. Its facilities for athletics are remarkable. Nothing has been overlooked in modernizing this attractive track and field. Jersey City soon is to have its own track, surpassing any in this city. The officials of Jersey City are constructing a track and field on the site of a hitherto unused reservoir and expect to have the work completed in time for the local championship meet which will be held there Aug. 23.

TWENTY CRAFT SAIL IN RACE OF STARS

Altair Leads Class A and Aquilla Pilots Class B Yachts at Manhasset Bay.

PORT WASHINGTON, L. I., Aug. 10.—Twenty yachts of the star class, subdivided into classes A and B, eleven in the former and nine in the latter, sailed in the eighth of a series of races for the championship of the Manhasset Bay, Port Washington, and Bayside Yacht Clubs over the course of the first mentioned organization this afternoon. The Altair, which won the championship last year, took kindly to the light northwest breeze, which strengthened presently, and came home a winner by 1 minute and 54 seconds over her old rival, the Hydra, owned and sailed by the veteran skipper Charles E. Hyde. E. V. Willis sailed the Altair.

Gordon Curry again won the race among yachts of the B Class, and inasmuch as only four more races will be sailed in the series, it is expected that the Aquilla will win the championship of that class.

VIKING LEADS POWER BOATS

Wins Rockaway Park Race on Corrected Time.

High speed power boat racing was the feature of the special regatta given by the Rockaway Park Yacht Club on Jamaica Bay yesterday. Six speed boats were sent off over a twelve-mile course, but only two finished, the others breaking down at various times during the brush. Sunnyside III. was the first across the finish line, covering the course in 51:10. On corrected time, the prize was taken by W. Hoff's Viking. The latter craft covered the course in 1:06:40. Her corrected time was 50:40.

The summary of the speed boat race follows:

PYTHON WINS TAMAQUA RACE

Geiser's Motor Boat First Home in Brush Around Scotland Light.

Starting on their handicap times, nine motor boats enrolled in the fleet of the Tamaqua Yacht Club held an interesting brush on the waters of the Atlantic yesterday. It was the annual race for the Commodore's Cups, and the course was from the starting line to and around Scotland Lightship and, back to the starting line. The distance was 15.23 nautical miles.

The winner was Python, the property of R. Geiser. The first boat to be sent away by the committee, made up of M. Tiene, Chairman; A. Lee, F. Williams, and J. A. Baylis, was Louise II., the property of Dr. J. Reese. The craft was sent away at 10 A. M. On their handicap times, the other boats followed until Commodore J. H. Pilsner's Renslit was sent away at 10:34:30.

The summary:

N.Y.A.C. GUNNERS DEFEATED

Chicago A. A. Wins Match at Traps by 974 to 936.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—The Chicago Athletic Association defeated its old rival, the New York Athletic Club, in the team trapshooting match today by 974 to 936. Captain Tracy H. Lewis, New York's high gun, with 191, scored fewer breaks than Chicago's lowest score, G. L. Becker's 192.

As Chicago won from New York by five targets earlier in the season, the local organization has a 43 target victory. Marks Arle, Illinois champion, was Chicago's high gun, with 197.

The match was one of three events preliminary to the Grand American Trap Shooting Tournament, which opens tomorrow with 684 official entries. Eight hundred are expected by the time of the opening.

In the other contests on today's program, B. F. Elbert of Des Moines, Iowa, for the second time this year successfully defended the Hazard world's double target championship trophy, and the South Shore Country Club's registered shoot was unfinished.

Clery Wins by 6 and 4.

PORT WASHINGTON, L. I., Aug. 10.—Lieutenant Edward Clery, Jr., the titleholder, won his second round at match play for the championship of the North Hempstead Country Club today when he disposed of Captain John Hoyt by 6 up and 4 to play. Besides Lieutenant Clery, Dr. Leander B. Newman, W. H. Chrystal, W. F. Dumser and Frank N. Belden remain for the semi-finals, which will be played next Saturday.

POLICE STOP SUNDAY GOLF.

State Officers Force Players to Quit on Massachusetts Links.

BOSTON, Aug. 10.—Local and State police officers stopped golfers from playing today on the links at the Bellevue Golf Club, Melrose, and Tedesco Country Club, Lynn, both in the metropolitan district.

The Tedesco Club is patronized by a large number of North Shore Summer residents from other States, and they protested against their sport being interrupted. When convinced that the police were determined to prevent playing the golfers motored to other courses.

QUINCY, Mass., Aug. 10.—Sunday golfers, who had come in large numbers to the links of the Wollaston Golf Club to take advantage of the ideal weather, were unable to complete their rounds today because of the intervention of the police. A State police officer and the Chief of Police of this city visited the course and informed players that they must put aside their clubs.

Several lawyers who had been playing argued the matter with the State officer, but he told them that he was acting under orders to enforce the law against Sunday sports. Members of the club spent the rest of the day in speculating as to whether this was the beginning of a drive to stop Sunday golf in the Metropolitan District. Such action has been urged recently by residents of cities where the State police have revoked permission granted by local authorities for Sunday baseball games.

OSTERRITTER WINS 5-MILE BIKE RACE

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, Aug. 10.—Charles Osterritter of Irvington, N. J., a member of the Bay View Wheelmen, was crowned amateur bicycle champion of America before 15,000 fans at the Velodrome here today. Osterritter had the title clinched before today, but finished the championship series of six races in an auspicious manner by winning the five-mile championship race from Fred Taylor, Anthony Young, and Joe Palmier, who finished in that order.

The final standing of the riders in the amateur championship competition is as follows: Charles Osterritter, 24; Anthony Young and John Staehle, 12; Fred Taylor, 8; Joe Palmier, 7; Michael Deorio, 2; Gus Klingel, 1.

Noble Leads Great Neck Golfers.

J. Noble won the cup for the low gross score and tied in the handicap on the links of the Great Neck Golf and Country Club yesterday. He covered the course in 70 strokes which gave him a 70 net on his handicap of 9. W. B. Hutton, who had a handicap of 28, also returned a net score of 70 and took the handicap trophy, as it was provided that no player could win both prizes.

EVERY HARVARD MAN IS EXPECTED TO GIVE

Definite Plans Outlined for Collecting New York's Share of $11,000,000 Fund.

LOCAL COMMITTEE NAMED

Athletes, Business Men, and War Workers Selected by Chairman Lamont.

Thomas W. Lamont of J. P. Morgan & Co., Chairman of the Harvard Endowment Fund Committee, has picked a local committee of 120 men to raise New York's share of the $11,000,000 needed to relieve the financial needs of Harvard University.

There are so many Harvard alumni in the city, over 4,000 in fact, that a large committee was deemed necessary in order to make a personal appeal to every graduate.

On the committee are J. P. Morgan and James A. Stillman, President of the National City Bank, who rowed on the crew; William Woodward, President of the Hanover National Bank, who was manager of the crew in college; E. V. R. Thayer, President of the Chase National Bank, and August Belmont.

The Secretaries of the committee are John W. Prentiss, member of Hornblower & Weeks, whose firm has contributed $50,000 to Harvard, and Langdon P. Marvin, who was Deputy Commissioner for the American Red Cross to Great Britain during the war. Mr. Prentiss, who was a Lieutenant Colonel in the war, has helped Mr. Lamont actively in organizing the New York Committee.

"There are a great number of Harvard men in New York," said Mr. Prentiss yesterday, "and we expect to collect a good share of the $11,000,000 for Harvard. We have a big job but we have selected able men to handle it. Our plan is to have ten Vice Chairmen and assign to each Chairman a special line of work with ten or twelve Committeemen to work with him. In this way the work will be well divided and no heavy burden will fall on any one man. It is our plan to ask every Harvard man to give something to Harvard.

"We have chosen men who have been successful and the interesting fact is that these same men distinguished themselves in college."

Names of Vice Chairmen.

The Vice Chairmen of the committee are: Robert P. Perkins, president of the Hartford Carpet Company and the Harvard Club head of the Second American Red Cross Commission to Italy with the rank of Lieut.-Colonel and in undergraduate days Captain of the University crew; Thomas W. Slocum of Minot, Hooper & Co., Vice President of the Harvard Club and an Overseer of Harvard College; F. R. Martin, Assistant General Manager of The Associated Press matters in Europe; Jerome D. Greene of Lee, Higginson & Co., formerly Secretary to the Harvard Corporation, now an Overseer of the College, during the war a member of the American Section of the International Maritimes Transport Council and also Secretary of the Commission on Reparations in Paris, as an undergraduate an editor on the Harvard Crimson and a member of the Glee Club; C. N. Bliss, Jr. of Bliss, Fabyan & Co., formerly Treasurer of the Republican National Committee, and during the war he was a member of the American Red Cross War Council; Herbert N. Strauss of R. H. Macy & Co.; George F. Baker, Jr. of the First National Bank, head of the first American Red Cross Commission to Italy with the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, and later at the Artillery Training School at Camp Taylor, Ky.; Anton H. Schefer of Schefer, Schramm and Vogel, formerly Secretary of the Harvard Club; Guy Emerson, Vice-president of the National Bank of Commerce, Secretary of his college class and formerly Director of Publicity of the Liberty Loan Committee; James G. Blaine, 3rd, grandson of the former Secretary of State, Vice-president of the Liberty National Bank and during the war Director of the Department of Development, American Red Cross, Washington.

On the committee is Charles S. Fairchild, who was Secretary of the Treasury under Cleveland F. R. Appleton, former President of the Harvard Club. Dr. George E. Brewer was a Colonel in charge of a base hospital. Francis Rogers was overseas in the Y. M. C. A. service. J. P. Cotton was representative of Herbert Hoover, Food Commissioner, in England. He was a law partner of the late Senator Spooner. John A. Gade was a naval attaché at Denmark and George G. McMurtry, Jr., was a Major in the 77th Division, being given the Congressional Medal of Honor and being awarded an honorary A. M. degree at Harvard. He was with Colonel Whittlesey, a Harvard Law School man, with the famous "Lost Battalion." S. L. Fuller was a member of the American Red Cross Commission to Italy. J. T. Pratt was also interested in the Red Cross. E. G. Merrill of the Central Union Trust Company, was a representative of the United States Food Administration on the American Red Cross Mission in Siberia.

Charles Brickley on Committee.

Of the more recent graduates on the committee, Charles E. Brickley is well known as the best football player Harvard has had. R. D. Wrenn, recently a major in the army, is a former tennis champion of Harvard, and holds a prominent place among Harvard's football and baseball players. Frederick M. Warburg was a member of the Harvard tennis team, and on several staffs of Harvard publications. He was Ivy Orator last commencement, being a member of the class of 1919. Franklin Remington, President of the Foundation Company, was a prominent football player. Dr. B. T. Tilton was a skilled oarsman in college.

John Corbin is an editorial writer for THE NEW YORK TIMES. George C. Clark, Jr., played third base on the baseball team, and is now a member of Clark, Dodge & Co. C. S. Sargent of Kidder, Peabody & Co. played football in college. George Whitney of J. P. Morgan & Co. was a manager of the crew. Horton J. Ijams of the same company was on the staff of the Crimson.

E. P. Currier was captain of the baseball team in 1909, and one of the best ball players that Harvard ever had. Hamilton Fish, Jr., was captain of the football team, and was recently a major in the A. E. F.; Jesse E. Wald of the law firm of White & Case rowed on three winning varsity crews, and was captain in his senior year. E. C. Bacon of J. P. Morgan & Co. rowed on the same crews with Wald. During the war he was a captain of artillery.

C. C. Little, formerly assistant dean of the college, is secretary of his class, was captain of the track team. Robert C. Benchley, formerly president of The Lampoon, is now on the staff of Vanity Fair. He was a worker for the Liberty Loan in New York.

G. H. Balgh, lately in the navy, was a member of one of Harvard's best crews. Thomas H. Frothingham played football in 1912. Robert T. P. Storer was captain of the team two years later, and a captain of artillery in the 77th Division. Charles E. Schall was on the crew. Lt. Col. Theodore Roosevelt was given an honorary A. M. degree at Harvard last commencement for his excellent war service.

Nicholas Biddle a Member.

Nicholas Biddle was a lieutenant colonel during the war. In New York he is a trustee of the Astor estate. Grenville Clark, who was a lieutenant colonel, was one of the men largely responsible for the Plattsburg Camp movement. Bernon S. Prentice was with the Red Cross in France. Ogden L. Mills was a major in the A. E. F., and J. W. Burden was a captain. Elihu Root, Jr., was a major. He is the son of Senator Root. Harold S. Vanderbilt was in the navy during the war. James L. Derby was a captain in the A. E. F. Dr. William B. Parsons, Jr., did efficient duty in the medical corps of the United States abroad.
